

The Paper Boat Voyage

An original bedtime story for ages 4–7. Reading time: about 4 minutes.

Kids Book Videos

On a rainy afternoon, Isha folded a paper boat.

She folded it from a page of old newspaper.

Crease, crease, crease.

She felt proud.

"Now you need a voyage," she said to the boat.

She named the boat Squeak.

She carried Squeak to the little stream behind her house.

The stream was full from the rain.

"Ready, Captain Squeak?" asked Isha.

She set the boat on the water.

Squeak bobbed.

Then Squeak sailed!

"Go, go, go!" cheered Isha.

That was three times she cheered it.

She felt excited.

Squeak sailed past a pebble.

It sailed under a twig bridge.

It sailed around a leaf island.

"Ahoy!" said Isha in her captain voice.

She felt brave.

Then Squeak got stuck.

A fallen branch blocked the stream.

Squeak bumped into it.

Bump.

Isha felt worried.

"Don't worry, Captain," she said.

She found a long stick.

Gently, gently, she nudged the branch aside.

Squeak floated free!

"Hooray!" said Isha.

She felt relieved.

Squeak sailed on.

It passed a duck feather floating like a sail.

It passed a frog sitting on a stone.

Ribbit, said the frog, as if to say hello.

Isha walked along the bank, following her boat.

Then the stream grew wide.

It joined the big pond.

Squeak floated out onto the open water.

It bobbed on the little waves.

Isha felt a little sad.

"Goodbye, Squeak," she whispered.

"Have a big adventure."

But she felt happy too.

Her boat had sailed so far.

That evening, Isha folded another boat.

This one she kept on her shelf.

"For tomorrow's voyage," she said.

She yawned.

The rain tapped softly on her window.

Sleep now, little captain.

Dream of paper boats on silver streams.

Moral: Even little boats can go on big voyages.*

The End