One sunny afternoon, Noor noticed her shadow.

It followed her everywhere.

Step, step, went Noor.

Step, step, went her shadow.

Noor felt curious.

"Hello, shadow," she said.

The shadow did not answer.

It just copied her.

Noor waved.

Her shadow waved.

Noor jumped.

Her shadow jumped.

Noor felt giggly.

"You are good at copying," she said.

She had an idea.

"Let's play tag!"

She ran across the yard.

Her shadow ran too.

"You can't catch me!" laughed Noor.

She felt joyful.

But no matter how fast she ran, her shadow stayed with her.

She zigged.

Her shadow zigged.

She zagged.

Her shadow zagged.

"Tag, tag, tag!" shouted Noor.

That was three times she shouted it.

She felt thrilled.

Then Noor tried to lose her shadow.

She hid behind the big tree.

But her shadow peeked out from behind her.

"Found you!" giggled Noor.

She felt silly.

She hid under the table.

Her shadow squeezed under too.

She hid behind Mama.

Her shadow hid behind her shadow.

Noor laughed and laughed.

Then the sun began to set.

Noor noticed something.

Her shadow was growing long.

Longer and longer.

"Look how tall I am!" said Noor.

She felt proud.

Her shadow stretched across the whole yard.

It touched the fence.

It touched the gate.

Then, as the sun dipped lower, the shadow faded.

It grew soft.

Then softer.

Then it was gone.

"Where did you go?" asked Noor.

She felt a little sad.

Mama smiled.

"Your shadow is sleeping," she said.

"It will wake up with the sun."

Noor liked that.

"Goodnight, shadow," she whispered.

"Goodnight, goodnight, goodnight."

That was three times she whispered it.

She felt sleepy too.

That night, Noor dreamed of long, stretchy shadows.

Sleep now, little runner.

Dream of shadows that play tag in the sun.

Moral: Some friends are with you even when you can't see them.
