

Sun and Moon Take Turns

An original bedtime story for ages 4–7. Reading time: about 4 minutes.

Kids Book Videos

Long ago, Sun and Moon argued.

"I should shine all the time," said Sun.

"No, I should," said Moon.

They both felt grumpy.

The world did not know what to do.

The flowers were confused.

"Is it day or night?" they asked.

The birds were confused too.

"Should we sing or sleep?" they asked.

Little Hana looked up at the sky.

She felt worried.

"Why are Sun and Moon fighting?" she asked her grandma.

"They both want to be the favorite," said Grandma.

Hana felt thoughtful.

She had an idea.

That night, she whispered to the Moon.

"Moon, the Sun works hard all day."

"He makes the flowers grow."

"He warms the playground."

The Moon felt surprised.

She had never thought about that.

The next morning, Hana whispered to the Sun.

"Sun, the Moon works hard all night."

"She lights the way for owls."

"She sings lullabies with her glow."

The Sun felt surprised too.

That evening, Sun and Moon met in the sky.

"I am sorry," said Sun.

"I am sorry too," said Moon.

They felt shy.

Then they made a deal.

"I will shine in the day," said Sun.

"And I will shine in the night," said Moon.

"We will take turns."

"Turns, turns, turns," they said together.

That was three times they said it.

They felt happy.

And that is how it has been ever since.

Sun shines bright all day.

Moon glows soft all night.

Hana watched them that evening.

Sun sank low, painting the sky pink.

Moon rose up, pale and round.

"Goodnight, Sun," whispered Hana.

"Good morning, Moon."

She felt peaceful.

She climbed into bed.

The Moon peeked through her window.

It glowed softly, like a nightlight.

Sleep now, little peacemaker.

Dream of suns and moons taking gentle turns.

Moral: Taking turns makes everyone shine.

The End