

The Little Blue Train

An original bedtime story for ages 4–7. Reading time: about 4 minutes.

In a toy shop window lived a little blue train.

His name was Chug.

Every day, children pointed at him.

But nobody took him home.

Chug felt lonely.

One evening, a small girl named Emi walked in.

She had saved her coins for weeks.

She pointed at Chug.

"That one," she said.

Chug felt hopeful.

Emi carried him home in her pocket.

That night, Chug had a dream.

He dreamed he was a real train.

A big, real, choo-choo train.

The next morning, Emi wound his key.

Chug rolled across the floor.

Choo-choo! he whistled.

Well, he tried.

Toot, toot, toot, went his little whistle.

That was three times he tooted it.

He felt happy.

Emi built tracks from books.

She built a tunnel from a shoebox.

She built a bridge from a ruler.

"All aboard!" said Emi.

Chug rolled through the tunnel.

Then out into the light!

He rolled over the bridge.

High, high, high.

He felt brave.

Then Chug reached the end of the tracks.

A big cushion mountain blocked the way.

"Oh no," said Emi. "A mountain!"

Chug felt worried.

But Emi had an idea.

She stacked more books.

She made the tracks climb up and over.

Chug chugged up the mountain.

Slowly, slowly, slowly.

He made it to the top!

Then whoosh, down the other side.

"We did it!" cheered Emi.

Chug felt proud.

That night, Emi tucked Chug into her toy box.

"Best train ever," she whispered.

Chug felt cozy.

He was not lonely anymore.

He had a friend.

He had tracks and tunnels and mountains.

Outside, a real train whistled far away.

Toot, toot.

Chug answered softly.

Toot.

Sleep now, little train.

Dream of tunnels and bridges and cushion mountains.

Moral: With a good friend, every journey is an adventure.
