The Fox and the Grapes

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

One warm afternoon, a hungry fox trotted through the orchard. His tummy rumbled. "Rumble, rumble... I am SO hungry!"

Just then, he looked up — and gasped.

Hanging high above him was a bunch of grapes, round and purple and shiny. Juicy drops of sweetness sparkled on every grape.

"Oh, yum!" said the fox. "Those are the most beautiful grapes I have ever seen. I MUST have them."

He stood on his hind legs and stretched his paws up high.
Stretch, stretch, stretch!

But the grapes were too high.

He crouched down and jumped. Boing! Up he went...
But the grapes were still too high.

He ran back, took a big run-up, and leapt as high as he could.
Whoosh!

Still too high!

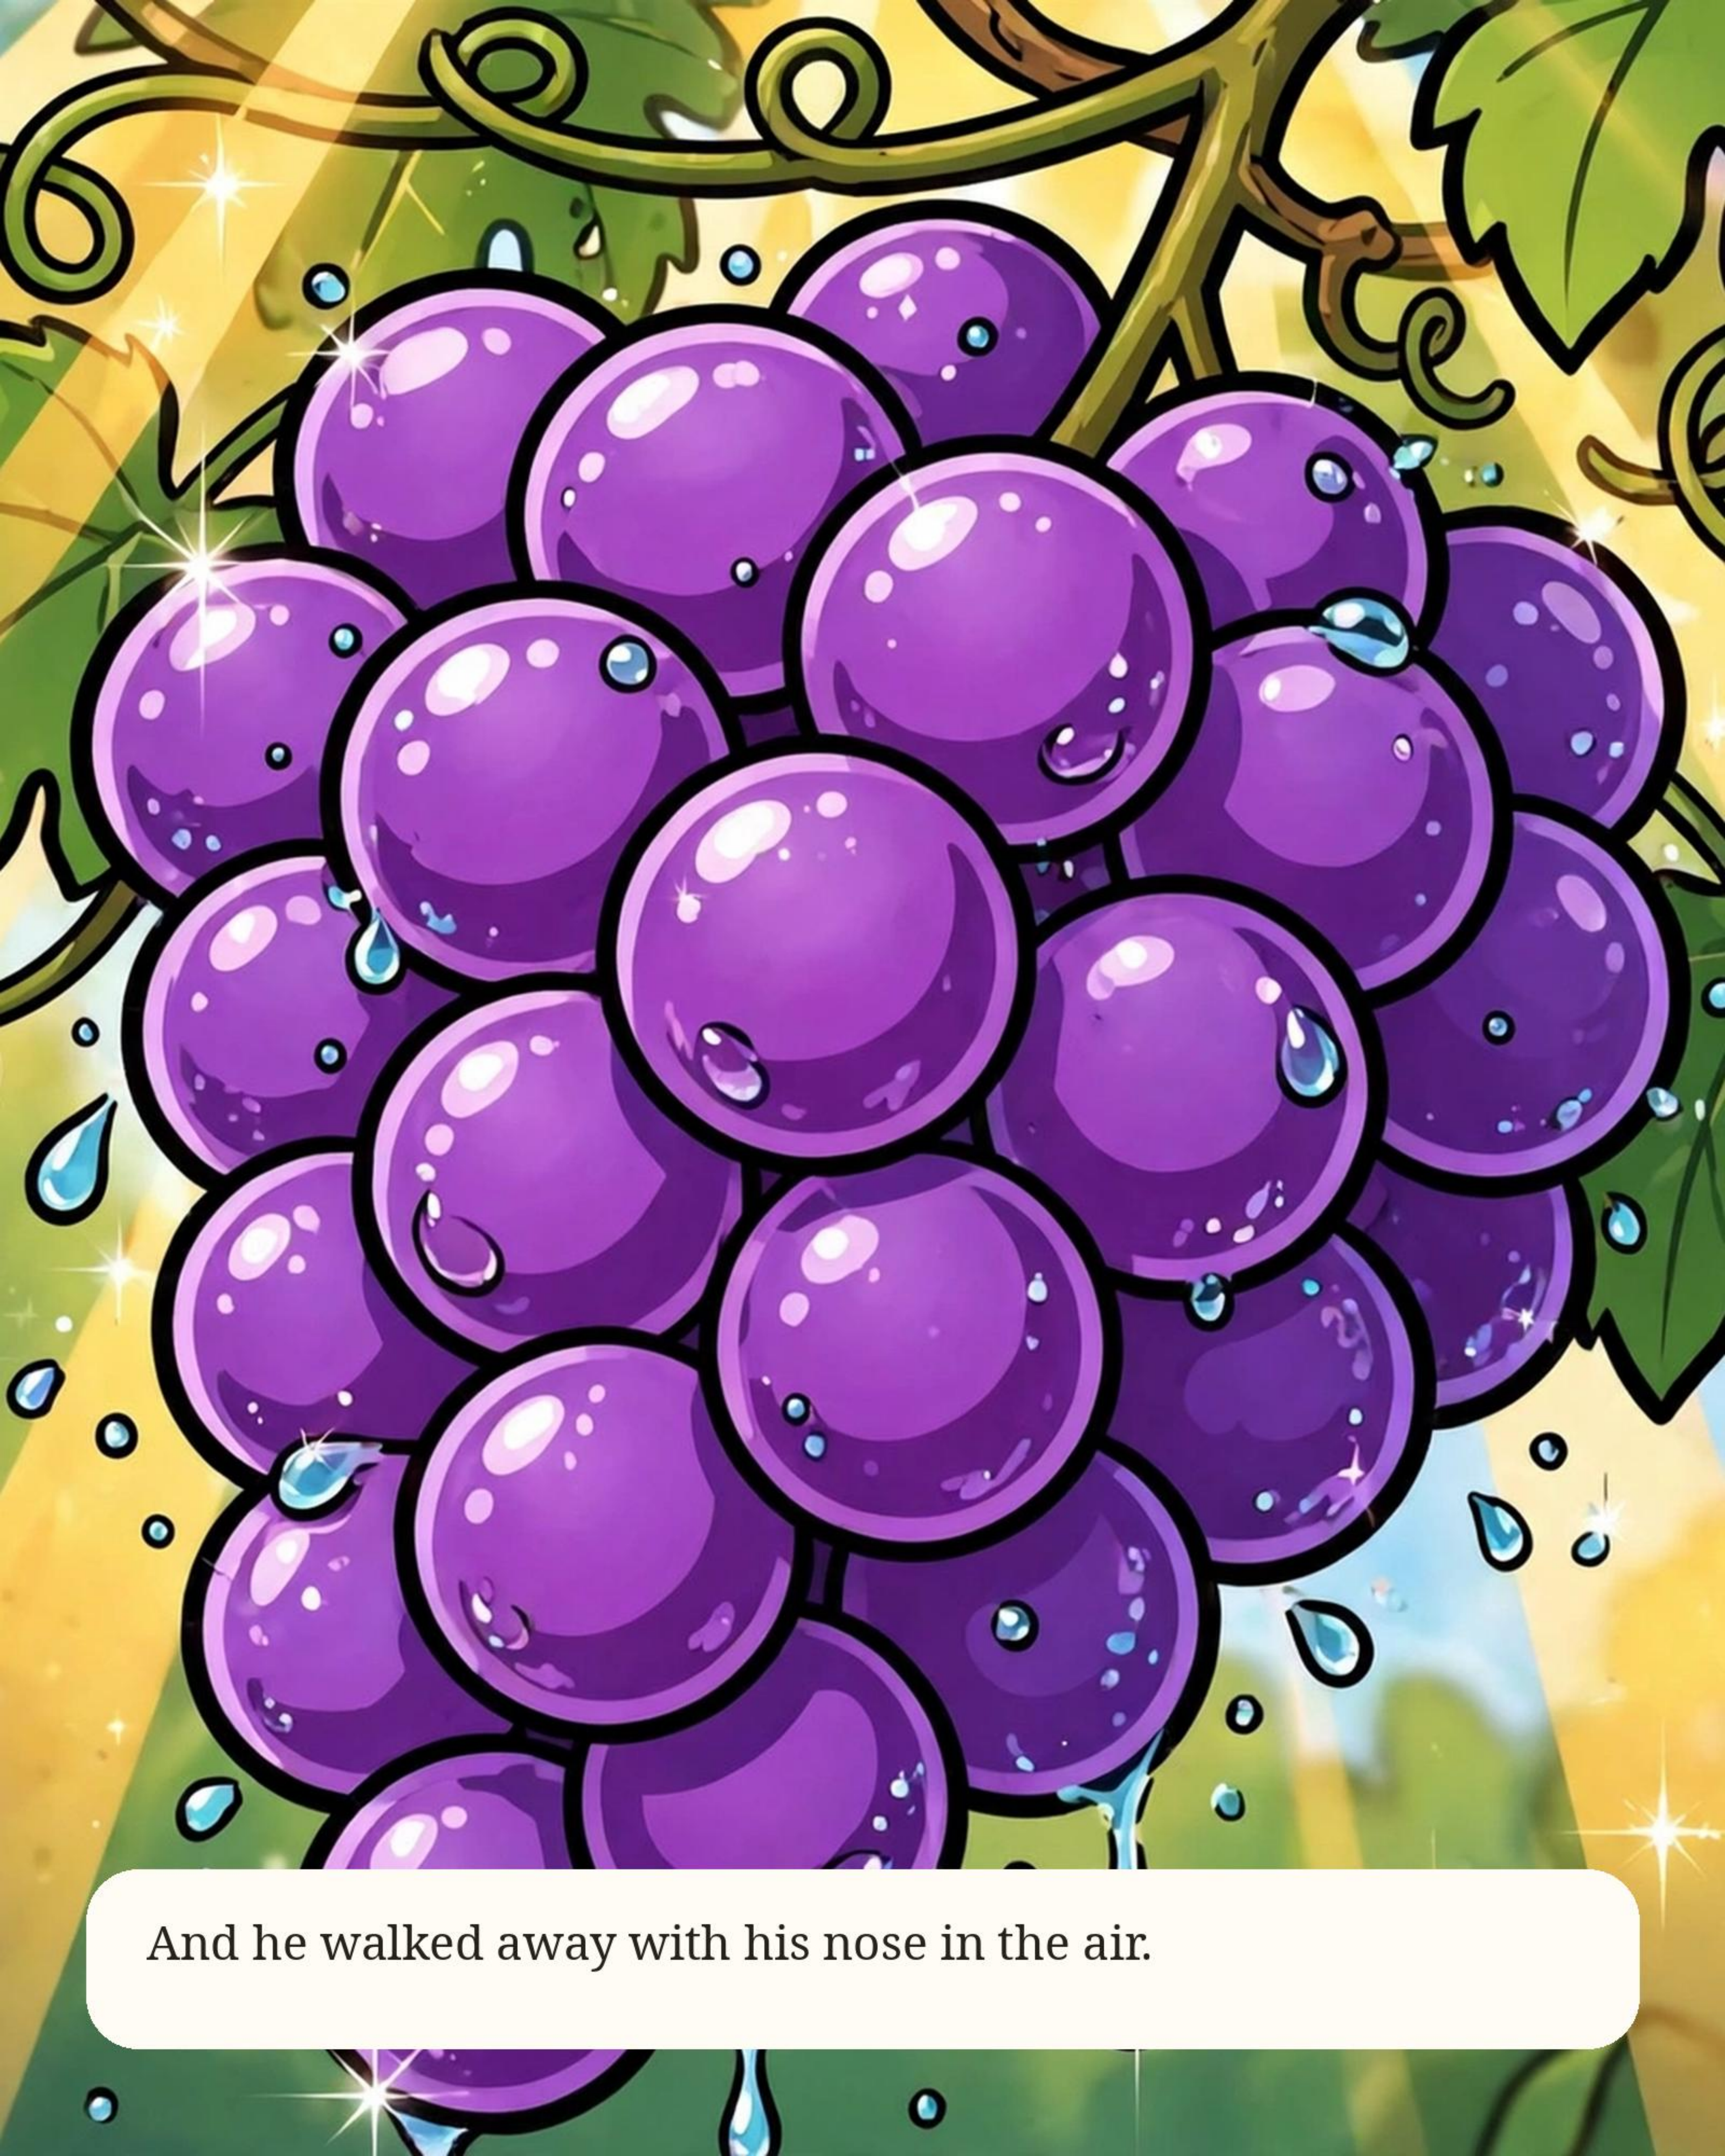

The fox sat down, panting. He tried again — and again — and again.

At last he was tired and cross. He looked up at the grapes one more time and sniffed.

"Hmph!" said the fox. "Those grapes are probably sour anyway. I don't want them!"

And he walked away with his nose in the air.

But the grapes were not sour at all. They were sweet and ripe and perfect.

Don't say something is bad just because you cannot have it.
