The Town Mouse and the Country Mouse

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

In a sunny wheat field lived a little brown mouse named Moni. She had a cozy hole under a tree root, a soft bed of dry leaves, and simple food — grains, roots, and berries.

One day her cousin Toni arrived from the big town. Toni was sleek and grey and wore a tiny red bow tie. "Dear Moni," he said, sniffing, "your food is so plain! Come and see how we live in town!"

Moni packed a little bundle and followed Toni down the road, past the fields, all the way to a tall grey house in the town.

Inside the kitchen, Moni's eyes grew round. On the table lay a grand feast — cheese, cake crumbs, grapes, and a whole bowl of butter! "Help yourself!" said Toni, climbing up.

The two cousins were just nibbling a piece of cake when — CREAK! — the kitchen door opened. In walked the cook with a big broom! "Shoo! Mice!" she cried.

"Run!" squeaked Toni. They dived under the cupboard and held their breath till the cook went away. Moni's heart was thumping like a drum.

They crept back to the table and were just tasting the cheese when — MEOW! A big fluffy orange cat leapt onto the table, its green eyes gleaming! "Run for your lives!" cried Toni.

Down the hole! Up the stairs! Round the corner! The cat chased them all the way to Toni's little hole in the wall, and only just missed Moni's tail.

Panting in the dark hole, Moni shook her head. "Your feasts are grand, Toni, but I do not like being chased by cats and brooms. I miss my quiet field."

So Moni went back home to her wheat field, her soft leaf bed, and her simple grains. And that night she slept safe and sound — happier than any feast could ever make her.

A simple, safe home is better than a grand feast full of danger.
