

Bedtime Tales

Daisy the Grateful Duckling

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

Daisy was a little duckling who lived by Bluebell Pond in Willowmere Wood. One morning, she woke up grumpy. The water was too cold, her breakfast seeds were too small, and her feathers felt too fluffy.

"Nothing is good today," she quacked.

Mama Duck swam beside her. "I see you feel grumpy," she said.
Daisy nodded.

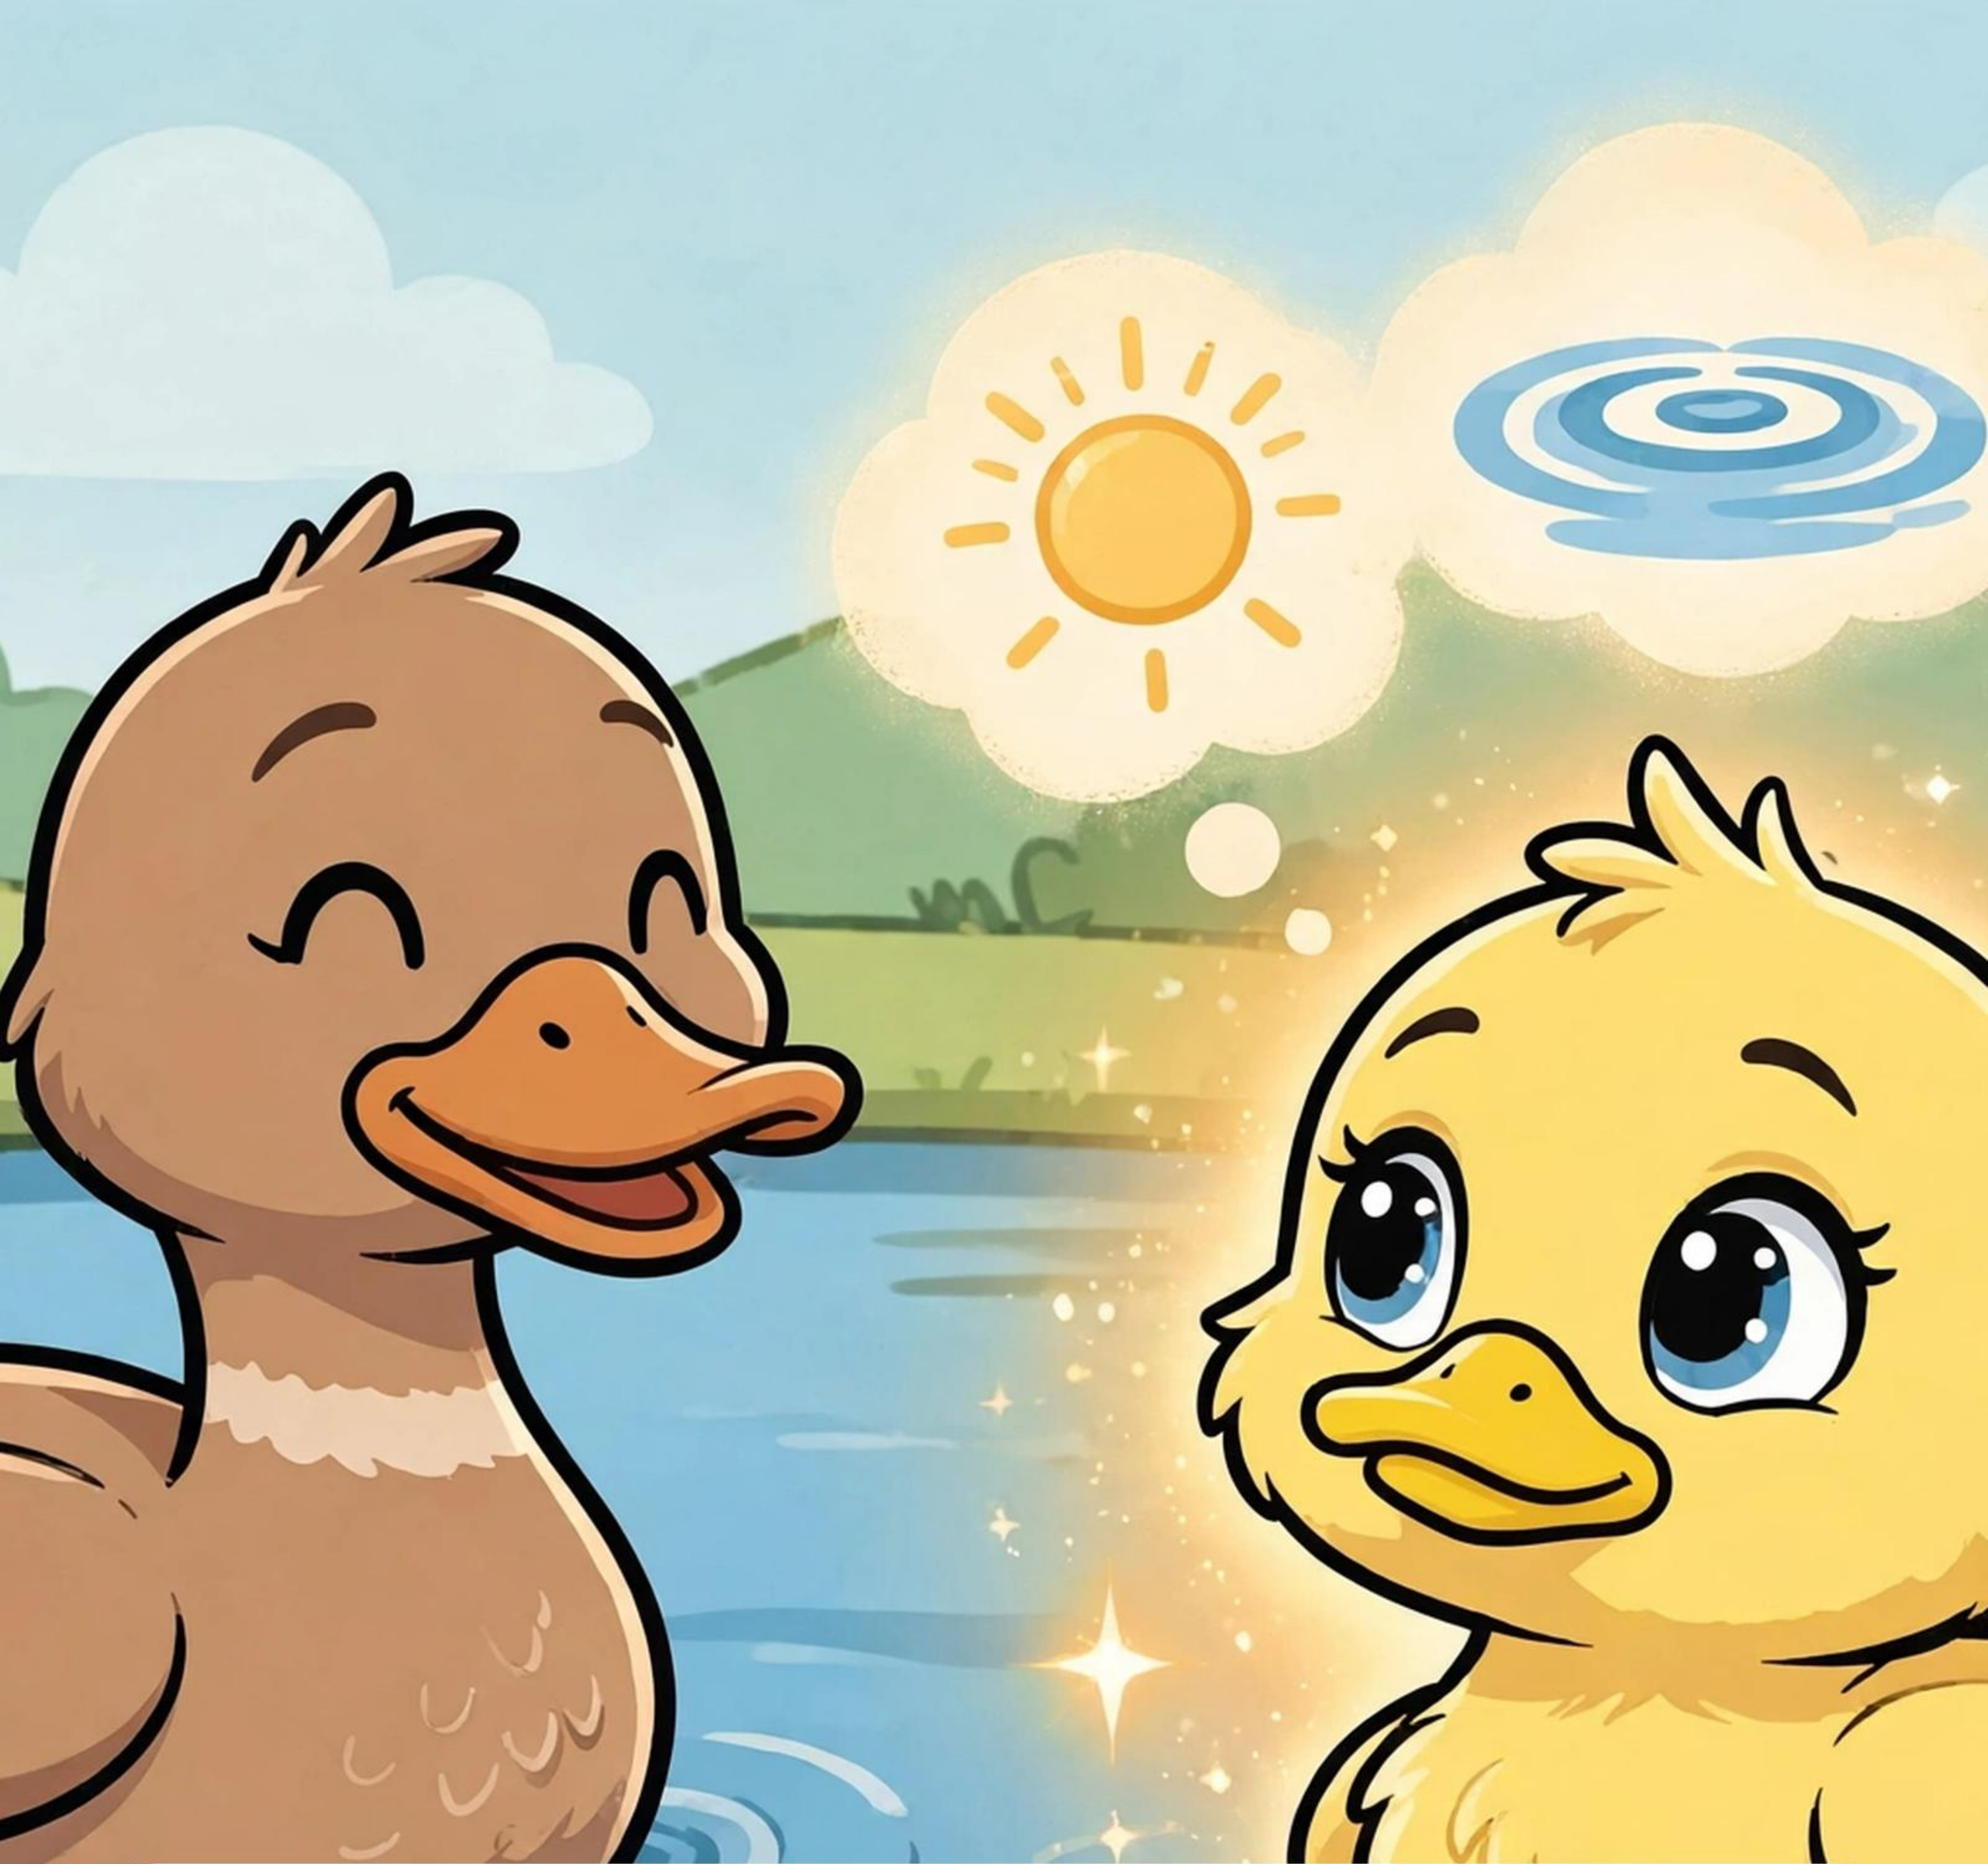

"It is okay to feel grumpy," Mama said. "But let us try the thank-you game."

"The thank-you game?" asked Daisy.

"Name three good things," Mama said. "Thankful hearts feel light as feathers."

"Thankful hearts feel light as feathers," she said again.

"Thankful hearts feel light as feathers," she said one more time. Daisy thought hard. "One," she said. "The sun is warm on my back. Two. The water holds me up. Three. You are here with me."

Mama Duck smiled.

Daisy felt something shift. The grumpy feeling got smaller, and the thankful feeling got bigger. She looked around with new eyes. Bluebell Pond sparkled like diamonds. A butterfly danced over the reeds. Her friend splashed and laughed. The clouds looked soft like cotton, and the breeze smelled sweet and fresh.

"Thank you, Bluebell Pond," Daisy whispered. "Thank you, sun. Thank you, Mama."

That afternoon, Daisy played happily. She dived and splashed and chased shiny ripples. Every splash felt like a giggle.

At bedtime, Mama tucked Daisy under her wing. "What are you thankful for tonight?" Mama asked.

"My warm nest," said Daisy. "Your soft wing. And this whole day."

Mama kissed her head. Daisy felt grateful and light as a feather.
Bluebell Pond sang its sleepy song — lap, lap, hush.

Daisy closed her eyes. She was thankful. She was loved.

Sleep now, little Daisy.

Sleep now, little Daisy.
