

Bedtime Tales

Fergus the Frog Finds His Croak

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

Fergus was a tiny green frog who lived on a lily pad in Bluebell Pond, in Willowmere Wood. Every evening, the frogs sang a pond song — big frogs croaked deep, medium frogs croaked round. "Brum brum! Brum brum!" But when Fergus tried, only a squeak came out.

"Meep," said Fergus. He tried again. "Meep."

The big frogs chuckled, and Fergus's cheeks turned red with embarrassment. "I cannot sing the pond song," he said, hopping behind a tall reed. He felt left out and small.

His friend Lottie the ladybug landed beside him. She had heard everything. "Why are you hiding, Fergus?" she asked.

"My croak is wrong," said Fergus. "It is too squeaky. It does not belong."

Lottie shook her tiny head. "Every sound belongs," she said. "Listen to me. Every croak belongs in the song."

"Every croak belongs in the song." Fergus repeated it quietly.
"Every croak belongs in the song." It became his hopeful words. "Every croak belongs in the song."

Lottie had an idea. "Sing your meep for me," she said. "Just for me." Fergus took a breath. "Meep," he sang. Lottie clapped her wings. "Again!"

"Meep meep!" sang Fergus. It sounded like tiny bells. Lottie buzzed with joy. "That is the prettiest part!" she said. "You can be the twinkle in the song." Hope warmed Fergus — his meep was not wrong. It was just different.

Can you meep like Fergus? Try it: meep meep! Now sing it like tiny bells: meep meep meep!

That evening, the pond choir gathered. The big frogs began — "Brum brum! Brum brum!" — and then Fergus hopped forward. "Meep meep!" he sang. His tiny bells fit perfectly. Brum meep brum meep. The song sounded even better, and the big frogs smiled. "Our twinkle!" they croaked. Fergus sang all evening.

When the moon rose, the song grew soft. Fergus rested on his lily pad while Lottie snuggled under a petal. "You were the best twinkle," she whispered. Fergus smiled. "Meep," he yawned softly. The pond water rocked gently, the stars hummed a quiet tune, and Fergus fell into a sweet, musical sleep.

Sleep now, little Fergus.

Sleep now, little Fergus.

The End

