

Bedtime Tales

Lolo the Lamb and the Rumbly Clouds

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

Lolo was a fluffy white lamb who lived in a green meadow in Willowmere Wood. She loved sunny days — munching clover, and skipping with her friends. Skip skip skip!

But Lolo did not love stormy days. When the clouds turned gray, her heart beat fast, and when the thunder rumbled, she trembled.

RUMBLE!

"Oh no," whispered Lolo. She ran under the Old Apple Tree, feeling scared and very, very small.

"I do not like the rumble clouds," she said.

Her friend Gus the goat trotted over. He was not scared at all — he was munching grass, calm as could be.

"Why are you hiding, Lolo?" asked Gus.

"The clouds are grumbling," said Lolo. "They sound angry."

Gus shook his head and smiled. "They are not angry," he said.

"They are only talking to each other."

"Clouds are only talking to each other."

Lolo repeated it softly. "Clouds are only talking to each other."
It became her calming words. "Clouds are only talking to each other."

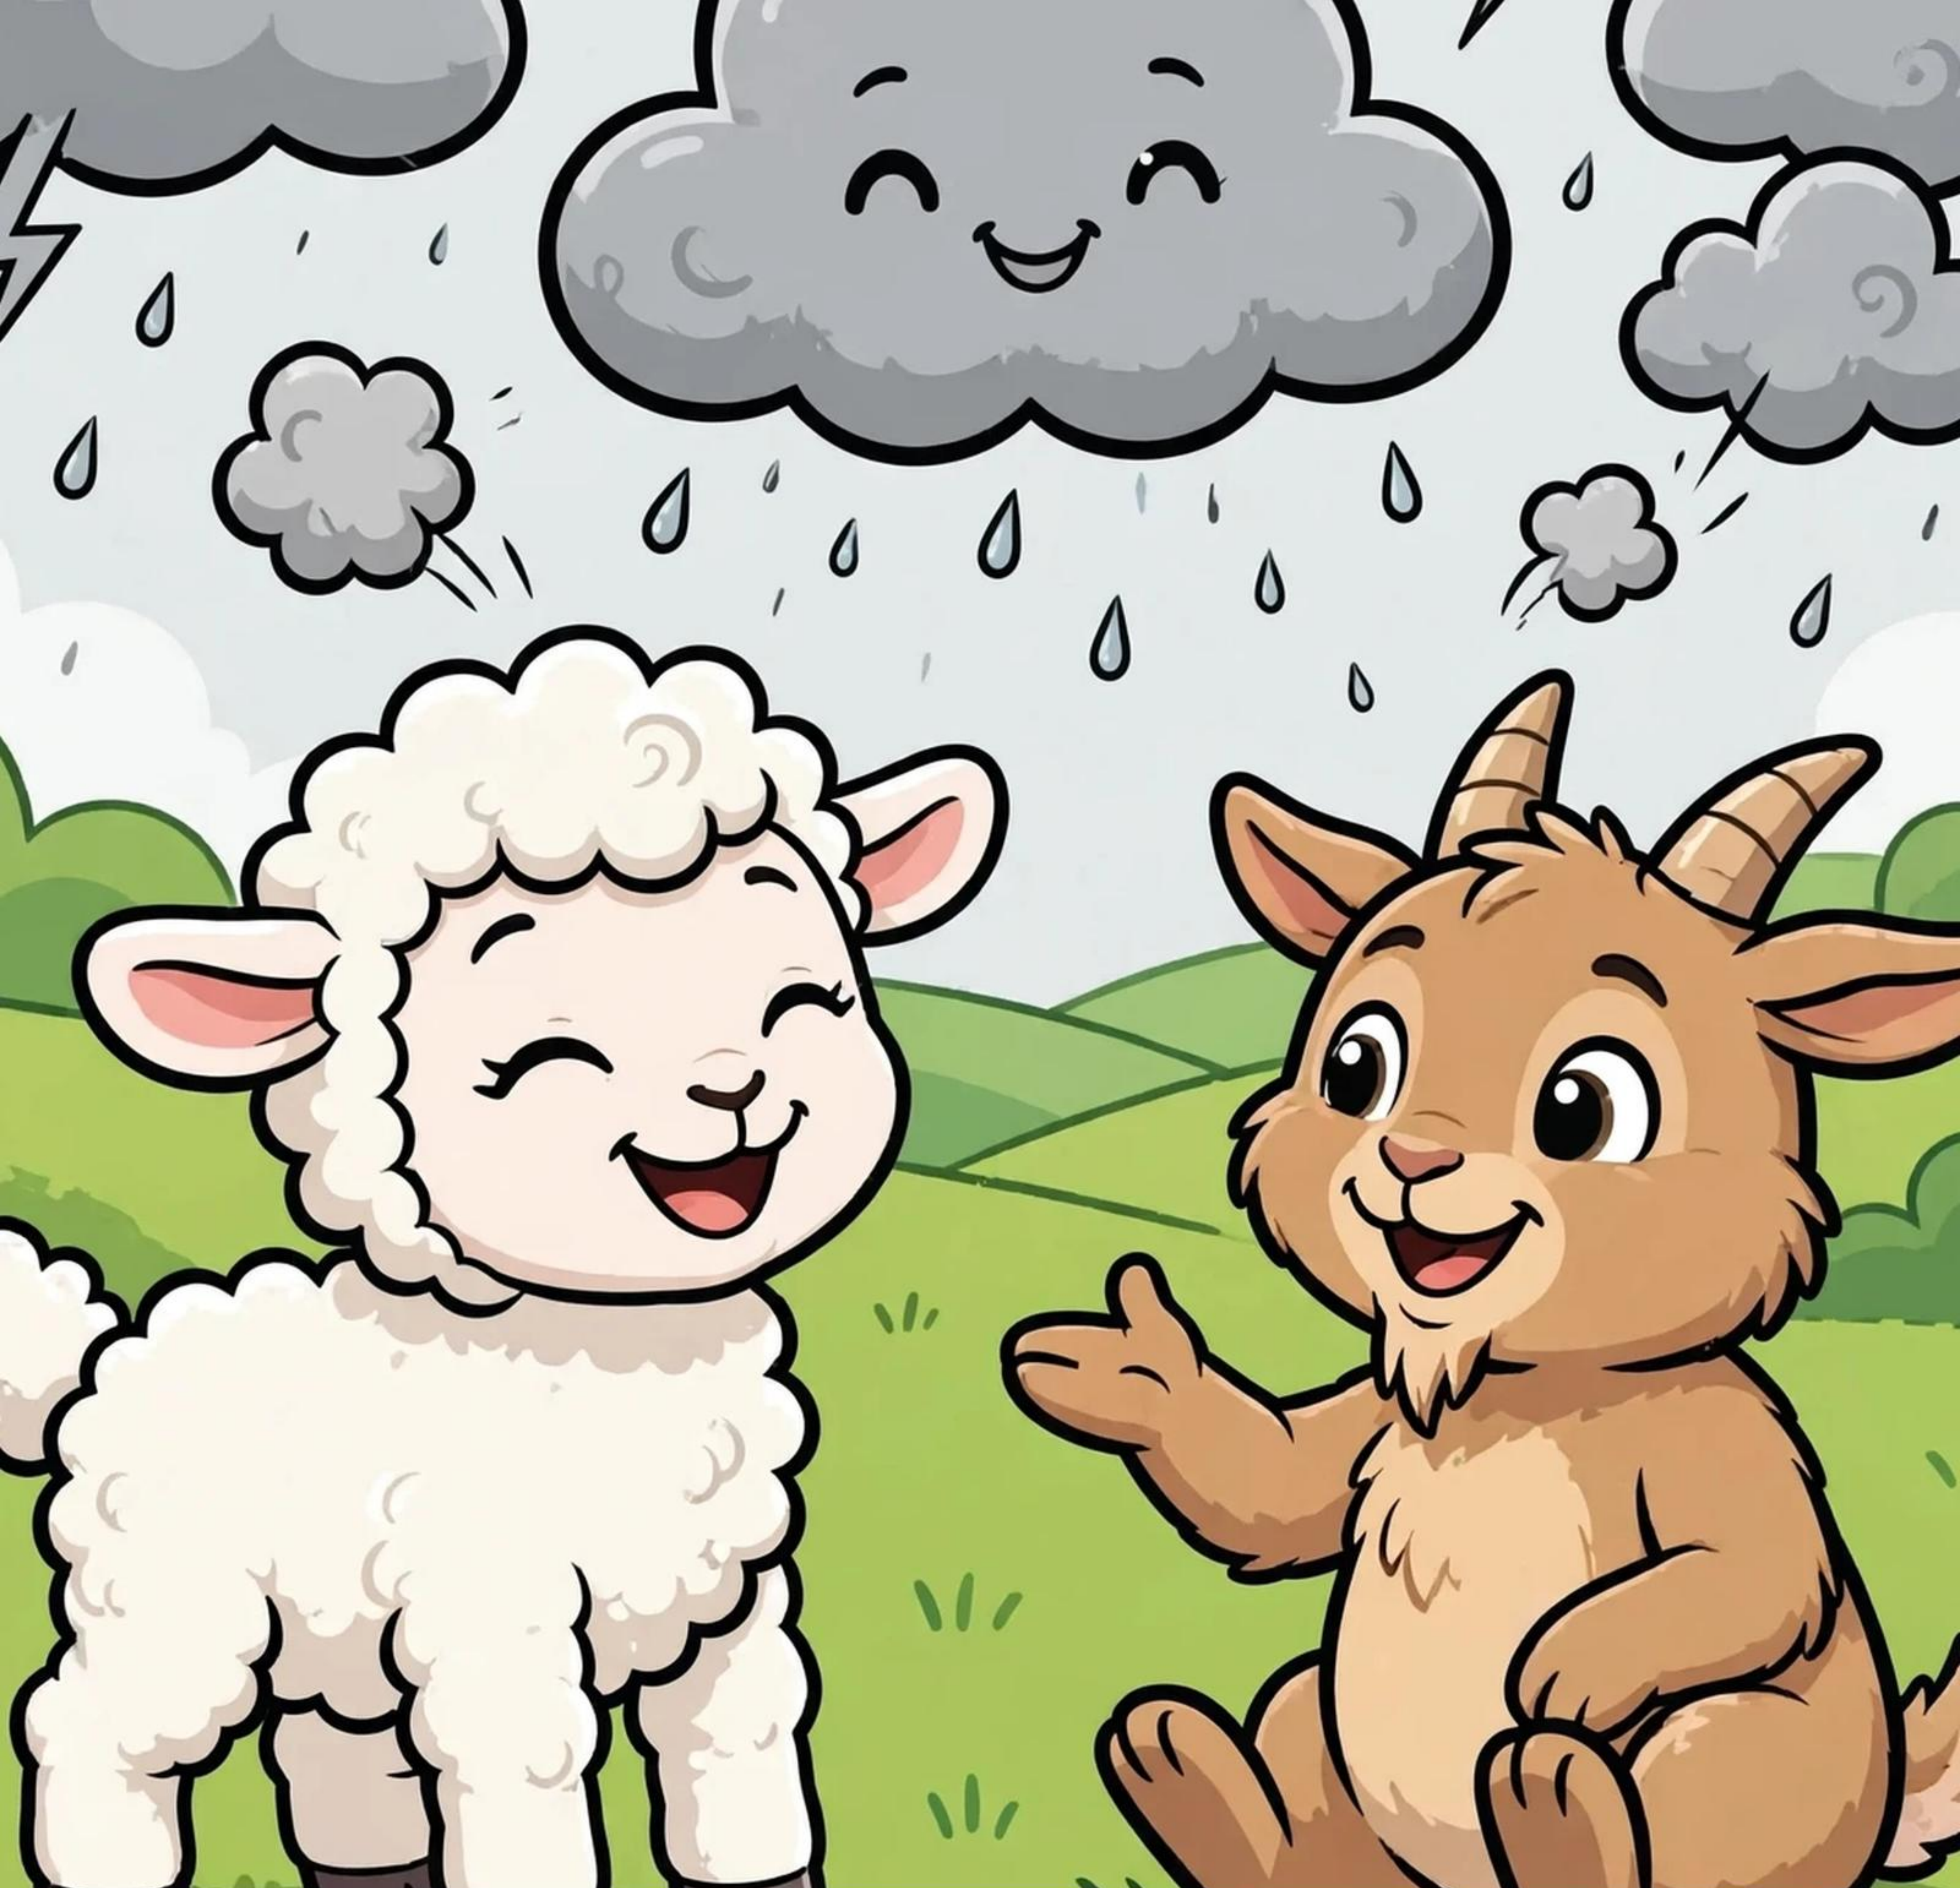

Gus sat beside Lolo. "Listen with me," he said.

RUMBLE!

"That one said hello," said Gus.

RUMBLE RUMBLE!

"That one said, how are you?"

Lolo giggled. "Really?" she asked.

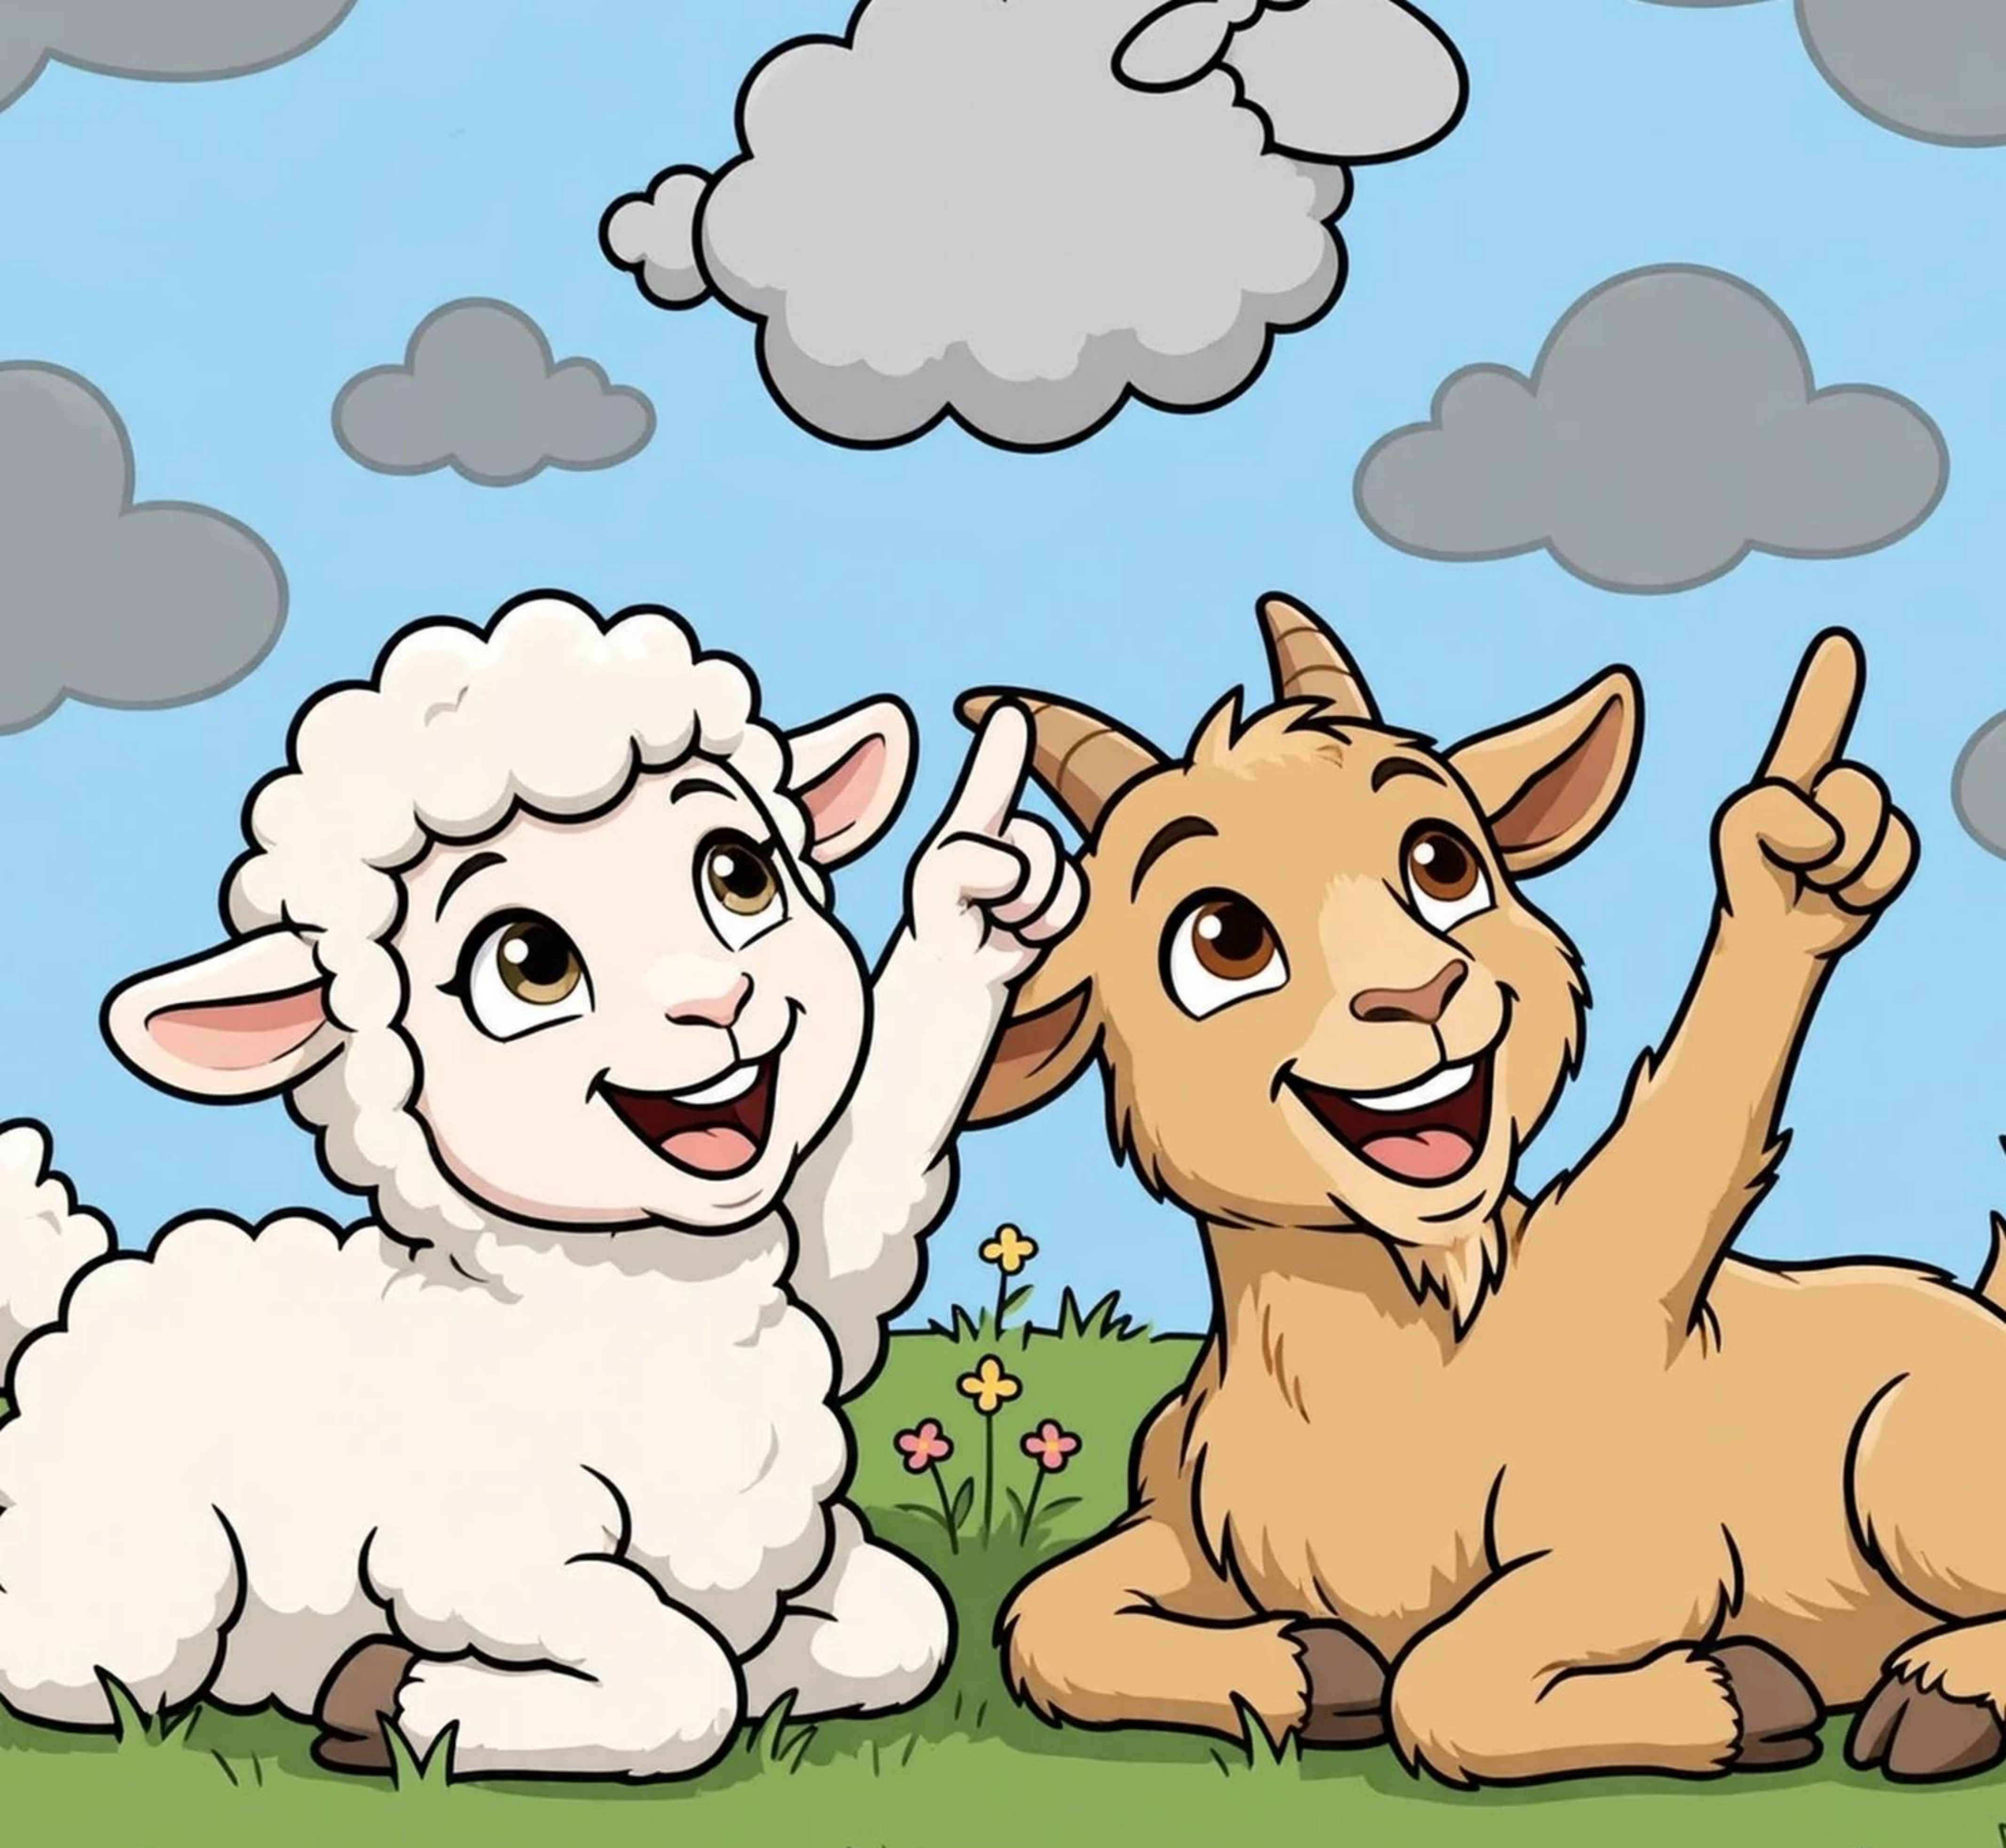

"Really," said Gus.

"Clouds are only talking to each other."

Lolo listened again. Rumble. This time it sounded friendly, like a giant's soft tummy grumble. She felt calmer — and braver too. The clouds were just chatting.

Can you rumble like a friendly cloud? Take a breath and say: rumble rumble. Now softer: rumble. See? Just clouds talking!

Lolo and Gus watched the clouds together, finding shapes in the gray puffs.

"That one looks like a sheep!" said Lolo.

"That one looks like a boat!" said Gus.

The rain began to patter. Pitter patter pitter patter. It sounded like a lullaby. Lolo did not hide anymore — she stood beside her friend.

When the storm passed, the sky turned pink, and a rainbow arched over the meadow. Lolo skipped through the wet grass. Splash splash splash! Gus skipped beside her.

That night, Lolo curled in the warm barn while Gus slept in the straw nearby.

"Goodnight, cloud listener," whispered Gus.

"Goodnight," yawned Lolo. She heard a soft rumble far away.
Just clouds saying goodnight.

Sleep now, little Lolo.

Sleep now, little Lolo.

The End

