Hugo Counts to Ten

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

Hugo the hedgehog was learning to count. He could count to three — one, two, three — but ten felt very far away.

"I want to count to ten," he told his grandma.

"You will," said Grandma. "Let's find ten acorns."

Hugo felt excited. They walked into the Whispering Pines.

"Look for acorns," said Grandma.

Hugo found the first acorn under the Old Apple Tree. "One," he said.

He found the second near a mossy stone. "Two," he said.

He found the third by a twisted root. "Three," he said.

He felt proud.

Then he found a fourth, a fifth, and a sixth. "Four, five, six," he counted. His basket was getting heavy, and he felt strong. Then he spotted a seventh under a leaf. "Seven," he said. An eighth sat by the stream. "Eight," he said.

A ninth hid behind a mushroom. "Nine," he said.

He felt so close. But where was number ten?

Hugo looked everywhere — under leaves, behind stones, inside a hollow log. No tenth acorn.

He felt worried. "What if there are only nine?" he asked.

Grandma smiled. "Count your basket again," she said. "Slowly."

Hugo counted. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine. Still nine.

Then Grandma pointed up. A tenth acorn was stuck in Hugo's own spiky back! It had hitched a ride.

"Ten!" laughed Hugo. "Ten, ten, ten!"

That was three times he said it.

He felt joyful. He had counted all the way to ten.

Grandma clapped. "You did it, Hugo."

That night, Hugo lined up his ten acorns by his bed. One, two, three, four, five. Six, seven, eight, nine, ten.

He yawned a tiny hedgehog yawn. His eyes grew heavy.
Sleep now, little Hugo.

Sleep now, little Hugo.
