Coco the kitten loved building forts. Tonight she built her biggest one yet. She draped blankets over chairs. She lined the floor with pillows. She hung a flashlight from the top like a tiny sun.

She crawled inside with her teddy bear, Button. "This is our fort," she whispered. "Nothing can bother us here."

But then she saw it. On the blanket wall, a strange shadow moved. It was tall and wobbly. It had a funny lumpy head. Coco felt scared. Her heart went thump-thump-thump.

"Button," she whispered, "do you see that shadow?"

Button the teddy said nothing, of course. Teddies are very good listeners. Coco hugged him tighter. The shadow wobbled again. Coco felt even more scared.

Then she had a brave idea. She would look closer. She picked up her flashlight. She shone it slowly toward the shadow.

The shadow grew smaller. And smaller. Until Coco started to giggle. The scary shadow was just Button's ear! Her teddy was sitting in front of the flashlight, making a silly shadow.

"Oh, Button!" laughed Coco. "It was you all along."

She felt relieved and a little bit silly. She moved Button to sit beside her. Now the blanket wall showed no shadows at all. Only soft, warm light.

"Snug in my fort, safe and warm," whispered Coco.

She arranged her pillows just right. She pulled her blanket up to her chin. The fort felt like the coziest place in the world. Rain began to patter softly on the window. Inside the fort, everything was dry and warm.

"Snug in my fort, safe and warm," she whispered again.

Button's button eyes seemed to smile at her. Coco yawned a tiny kitten yawn. Her whiskers drooped sleepily. She felt safe and loved.

"Snug in my fort, safe and warm," she whispered one last time.

Her eyes closed slowly. The flashlight glowed like a sleepy sun above her. The rain sang a soft song outside. Coco dreamed she lived in a castle made of blankets.

Sleep now, little kitten. Your fort will keep you safe all night long. Nothing scary can reach you here.

Moral: Scary things often turn out to be something silly and safe.
