

Sona Forgives Her Friend

An original bedtime story for ages 4–7. Reading time: about 4 minutes.

Kids Book Videos

Sona was a little sparrow.

She had a pretty blue ribbon.

It was a gift from her grandma.

One day, she lent it to her friend Tuli.

"Please be careful with it," Sona said.

The next day, Tuli came back.

Her head was low.

Her voice was small.

"Sona, I lost your ribbon," she said.

"The wind took it."

Sona felt upset.

Her chest felt tight.

Her eyes felt hot.

"That was my favorite ribbon!" she chirped.

Tuli looked very sorry.

"I am really sorry," she whispered.

Sona flew to her nest.

She sat alone.

She felt angry and sad.

Mama Sparrow came to her.

She said, "I see you feel upset."

Sona nodded.

"It is okay to feel upset," Mama said.

"Losing something special hurts."

Then Mama said something wise.

"Forgiving sets two hearts free."

"Forgiving sets two hearts free," she said again.

"Forgiving sets two hearts free," she said one more time.

Sona thought about Tuli.

Tuli had said sorry.

Tuli felt bad too.

Sona took a deep breath.

She flew back to Tuli.

"I forgive you," she said softly.

"It was an accident."

Tuli's eyes shone.

"Thank you, Sona," she said.

"You are the best friend."

They hugged with their little wings.

Sona felt the tight feeling melt.

Her chest felt light.

Her heart felt warm.

Forgiving felt good.

That evening, they played together.

They chased falling leaves.

They sang little songs.

They were friends again.

True friends.

At bedtime, Sona snuggled into her nest.

She felt upset earlier.

Now she felt peaceful.

Mama kissed her head.

"Forgiving was very brave," she said.

The night breeze rocked the tree.

Sway, sway, hush.

Sona closed her eyes.

She was kind.

She was loved.

Goodnight, Sona.

Moral: Forgiving a friend heals both hearts and keeps friendship strong.

The End