The Ant and the Grasshopper

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

On a bright summer morning, a little ant marched along the garden path. On her back she carried a grain of corn, twice as big as she was!

Tramp, tramp, tramp went her tiny feet, all the way to her cozy home under the old oak tree.

Sitting on a leaf nearby was the grasshopper, playing his fiddle.
La-la-la-la-la! He sang all day long.

"Come and sing with me, little ant!" called the grasshopper.
"The sun is warm and the day is long."

"I must work," said the ant. "Winter is coming, and I must fill my pantry. Why don't you gather some food too?"

"Winter?" laughed the grasshopper. "Winter is far away! La-la-la-la-la!"

All summer, the ant worked hard — carrying corn, wheat, and seeds down to her pantry.

All summer, the grasshopper sang and played and danced in the sun.

Then the leaves turned red and gold, and the cold wind came.
Winter had arrived!

Snow fell, soft and white. The grasshopper shivered under a bare twig. His tummy rumbled. There was nothing to eat.

Tramp, tramp, tramp — the ant came out of her warm home, snug and full.

"Please," shivered the grasshopper, "may I have a little food?"

The ant remembered his summer song — and she smiled kindly and shared her supper.

That winter, the grasshopper learned a new song — the song of the hardworking ant.

Work today and you will be happy tomorrow — little efforts now keep us warm later.
