The Boy Who Cried Wolf

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

High on a green hill lived a little shepherd boy named Akku. Every morning he took his flock of fluffy white sheep to the grassy meadow to graze.

Akku had a very easy job, and soon he grew bored. "Nothing exciting ever happens here," he sighed, swinging his little wooden staff.

One afternoon, a naughty idea popped into his head. He cupped his hands around his mouth and shouted as loud as he could, "Wolf! Wolf! A wolf is coming!"

Down in the village, the farmers heard his cries. They dropped their tools and ran up the hill, carrying sticks and pots and pans. "Where is the wolf?" they panted.

But there was no wolf anywhere — only Akku, giggling and rolling in the grass. "Ha ha! There is no wolf! I was only joking!" The farmers shook their heads and walked back down the hill.

A few days later, Akku did it again. "Wolf! Wolf!" he cried. The farmers came running once more, and once more Akku laughed at them. "You must not cry wolf," they warned him. But Akku just grinned.

Then one sunny evening, as the sheep grazed quietly, Akku looked up — and his heart jumped. A real wolf! Big, grey, and hungry, padding out from behind the bushes!

Akku jumped to his feet. "WOLF! WOLF! A REAL WOLF!" he screamed with all his might. His voice echoed across the hills.

Down in the village, the farmers heard him crying. But this time they stayed where they were. "That boy is joking again," they said, and went back to their work.

The wolf pounced toward the flock, and Akku shouted and waved his staff — but he was all alone. At last he ran down to the village and told the farmers, "Next time I will always tell the truth." And from that day on, he did.

No one believes a liar, even when he tells the truth.
