The Gingerbread Man

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

Once upon a time, in a little cottage at the edge of the woods, lived a kind old woman.

One morning she baked gingerbread — and shaped one cookie just like a little man. "You are my Gingerbread Man," she smiled, giving him raisin eyes, a cherry nose, and a frosty white smile.

She slid him into the oven to bake. But when she opened the oven door — hop! The Gingerbread Man jumped out and ran! "Stop! Come back!" cried the old woman. But the Gingerbread Man only laughed, "Run, run, as fast as you can! You can't catch me — I'm the Gingerbread Man!"

He ran right past the old man at the garden gate. "Stop!" cried the old man. But the Gingerbread Man sang his song and ran faster.

He ran past a cow in the green field. "Moo! Stop!" said the cow. But the Gingerbread Man only sang louder and ran on.

He ran past a horse in the meadow. "Neigh! Stop!" said the horse. But nobody could catch the speedy Gingerbread Man.

Then he came to a wide, wide river. It was too deep to wade and too wide to jump. "Oh no!" he said. "How will I cross?"

Just then, a sly fox stepped out from behind a tree. "Little cookie," said the fox sweetly, "hop onto my back, and I will carry you across."

Halfway across, the water splashed higher. "The water is rising!" cried the Gingerbread Man. "Jump onto my nose," said the fox. "It is nice and dry up here."

The Gingerbread Man jumped onto the fox's nose. SNAP! went the fox's jaws. And that was the end of the Gingerbread Man.

The old woman waited at her window that evening. But her little cookie man never, ever came home.

Sweet talk can hide a sly plan — be careful of flattering strangers.

The End
