The Wind and the Sun

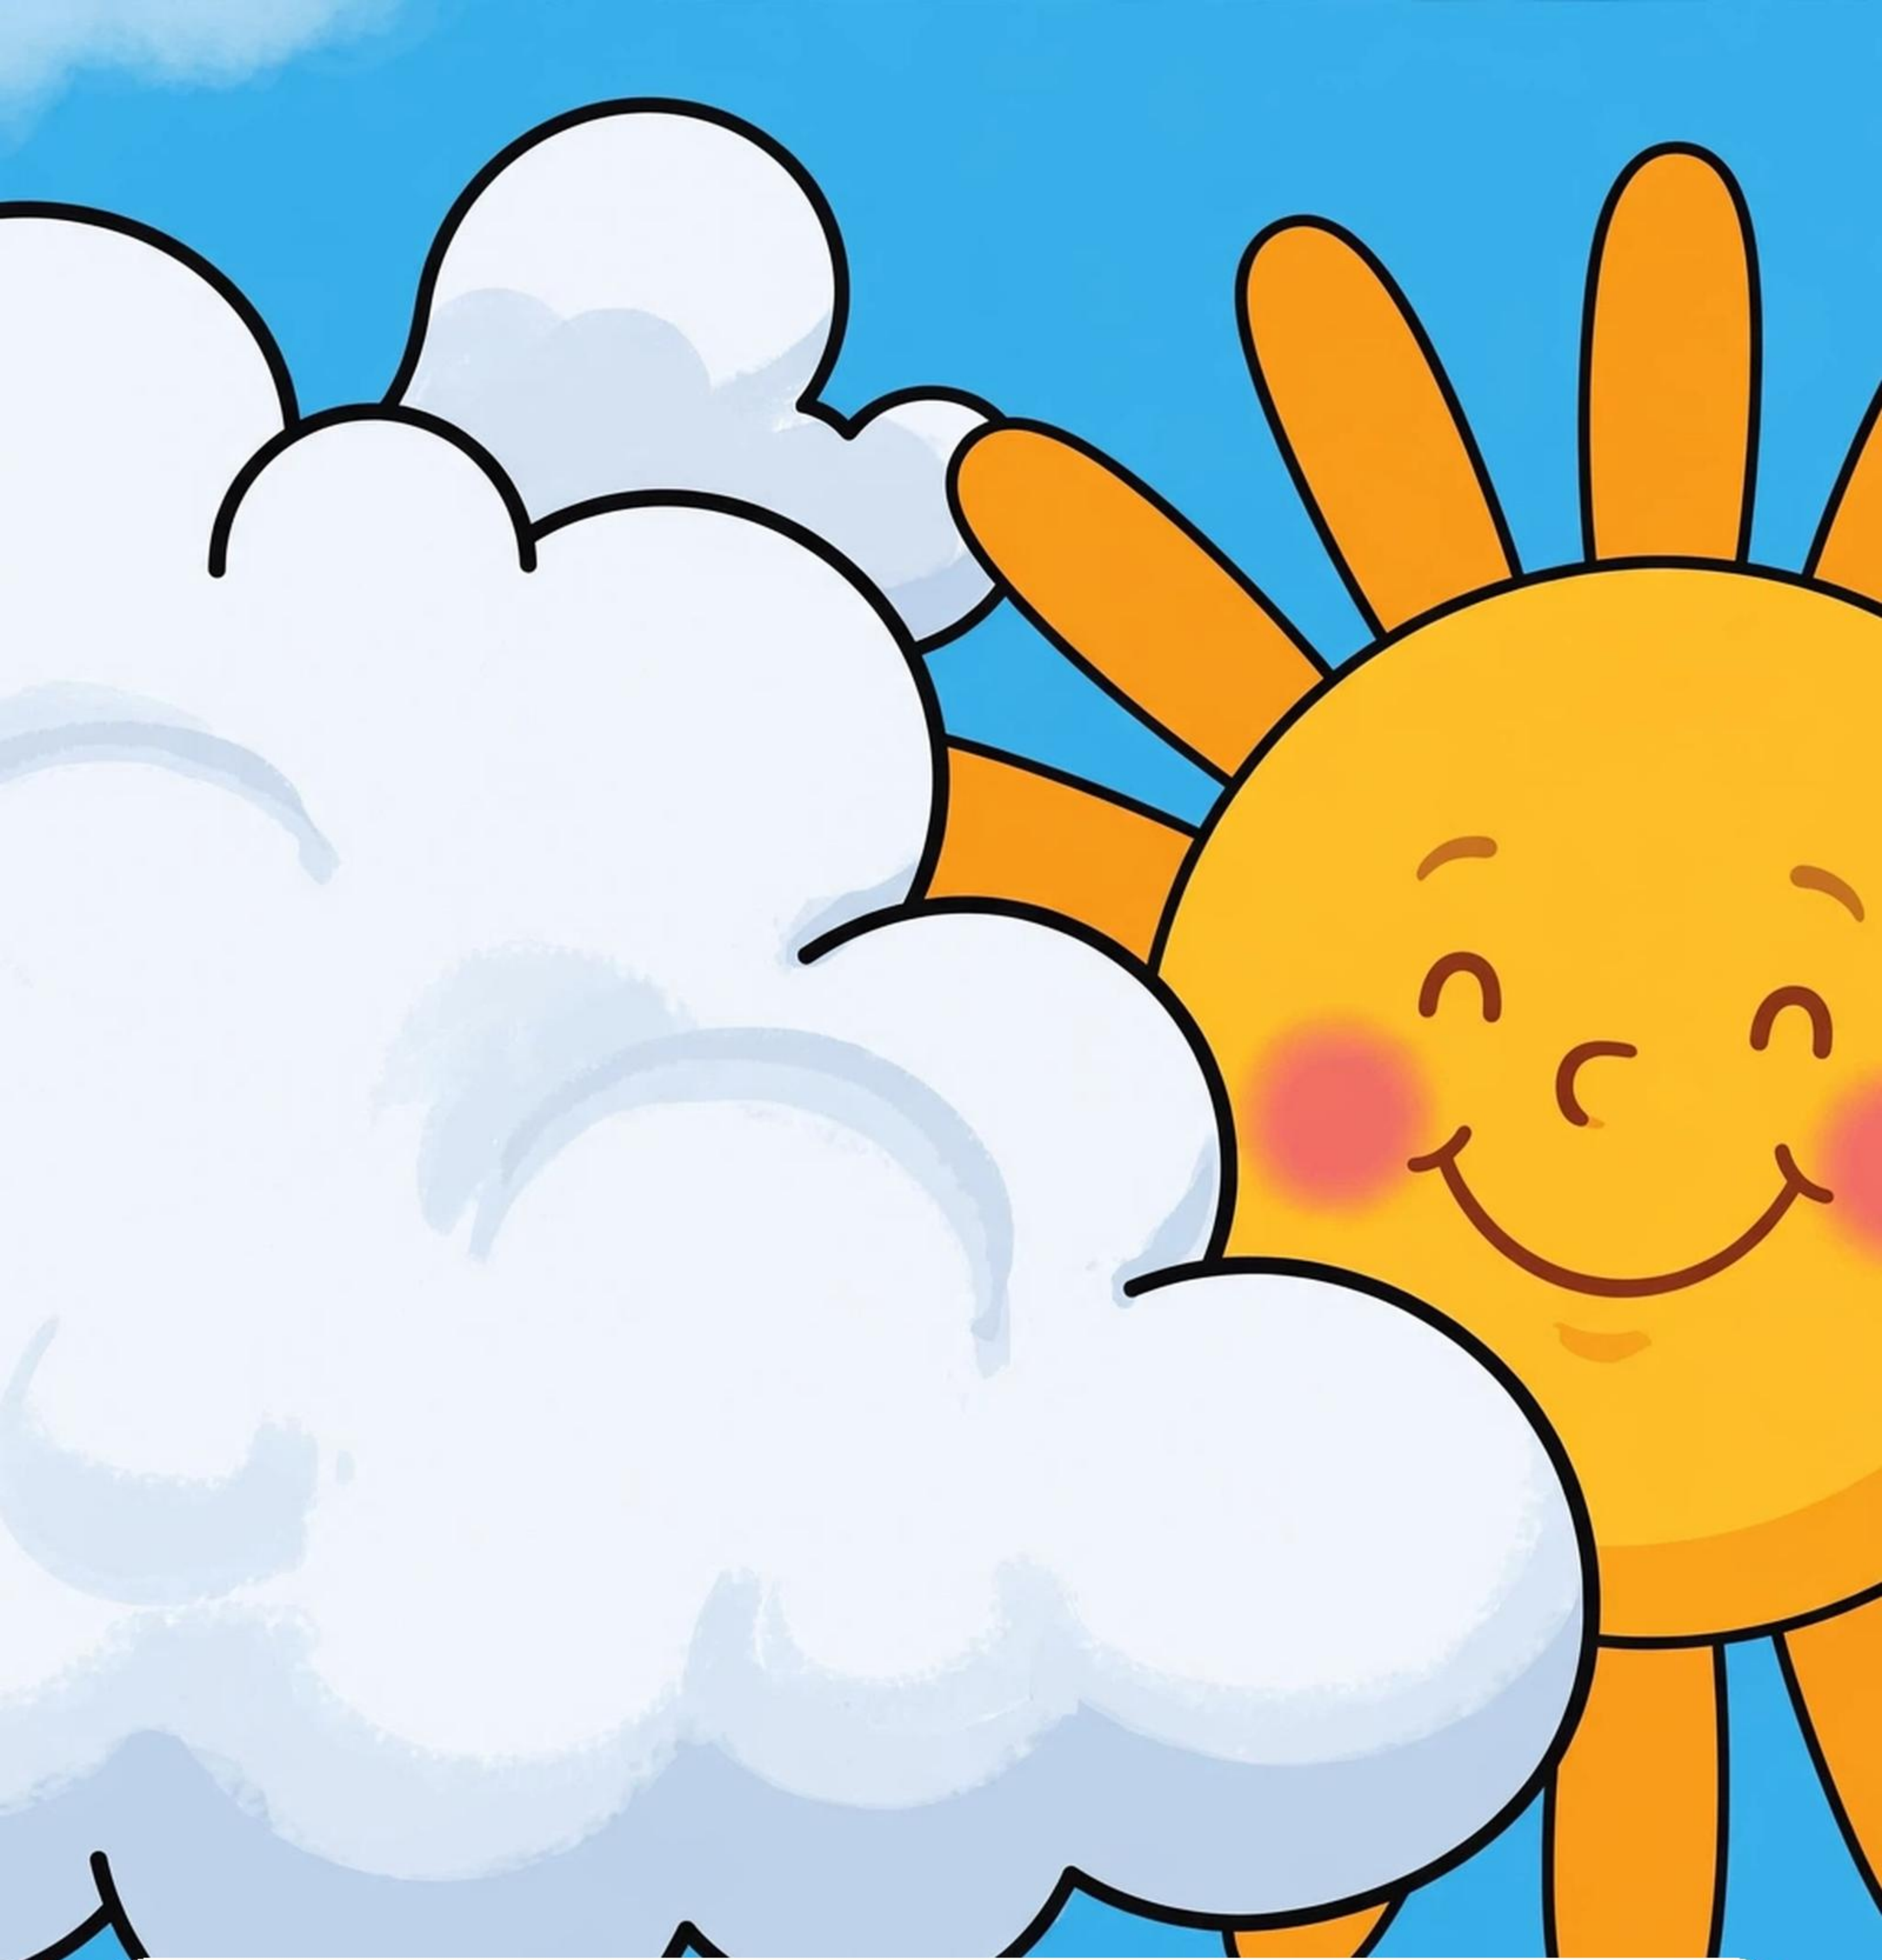

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

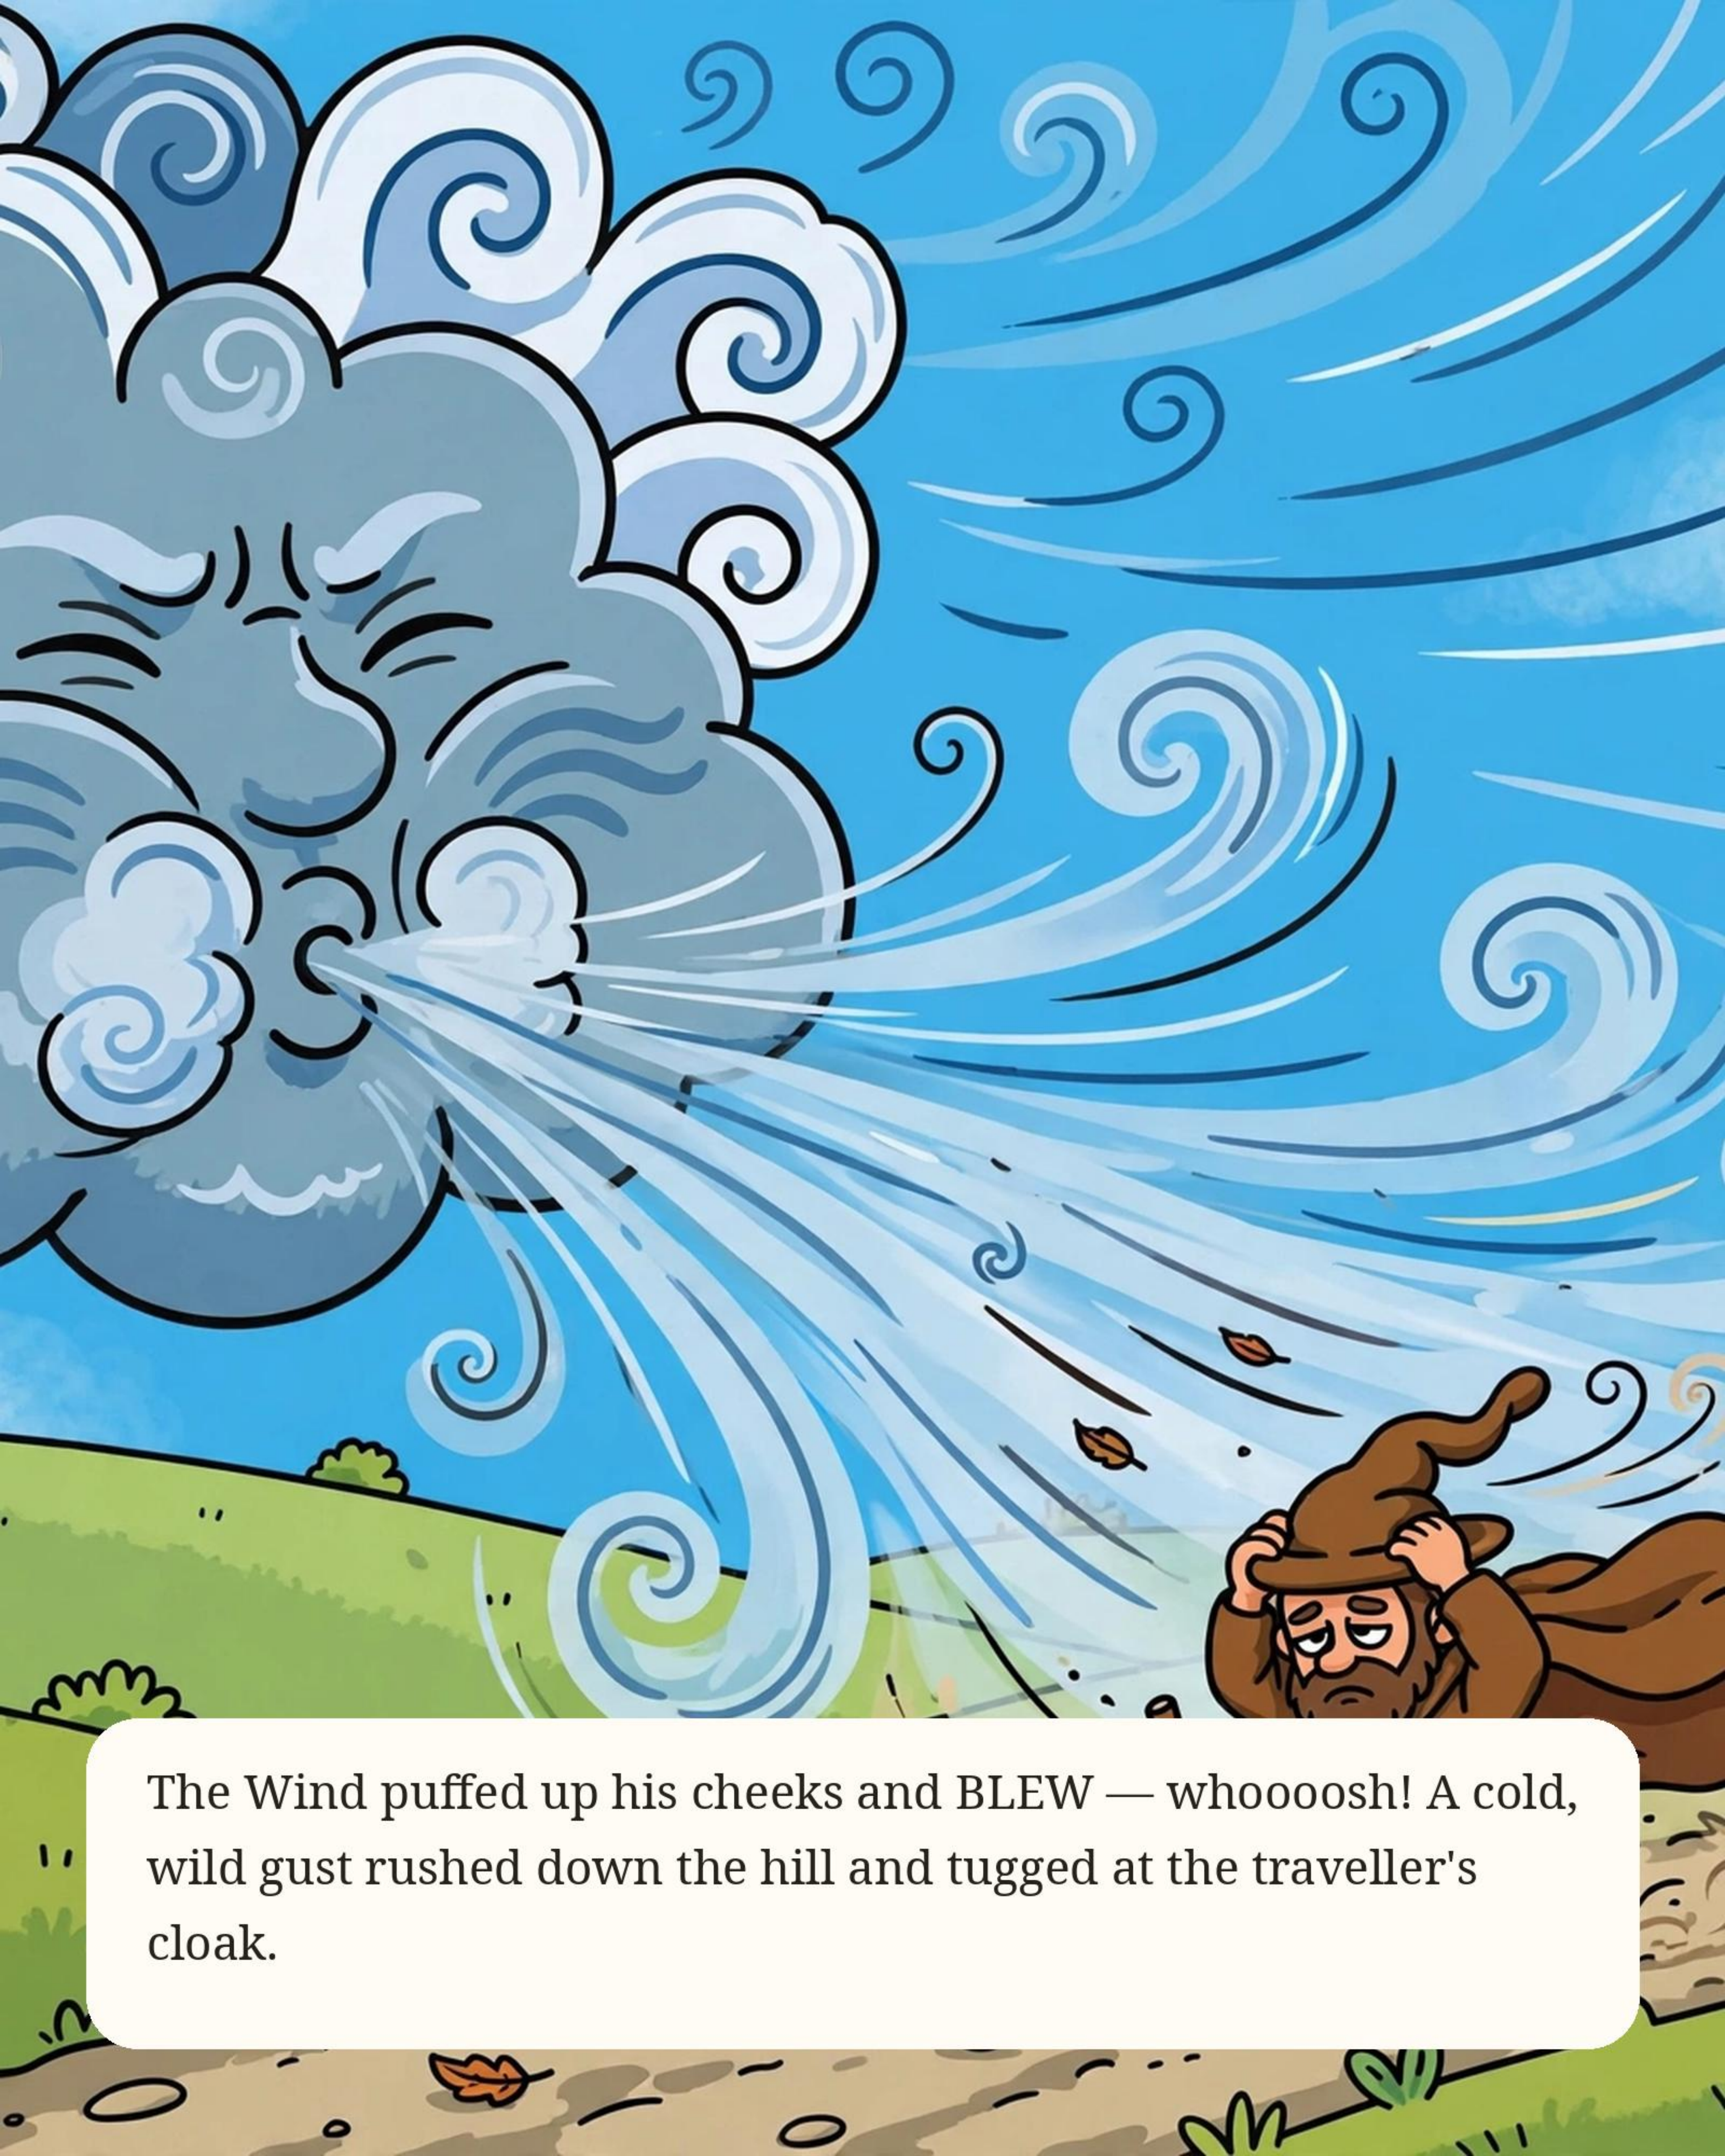

One breezy morning, the North Wind and the Sun got into an argument high above the hills. "I am stronger than you!" roared the Wind. "No, I am!" laughed the Sun.

Just then they spotted a traveller walking along the dusty road below, wrapped in a thick brown cloak. "Let us have a contest!" said the Wind. "Whoever makes him take off his cloak is the strongest."

"Agreed," smiled the Sun, and hid behind a soft white cloud to watch.

The Wind puffed up his cheeks and BLEW — whoooosh! A cold, wild gust rushed down the hill and tugged at the traveller's cloak.

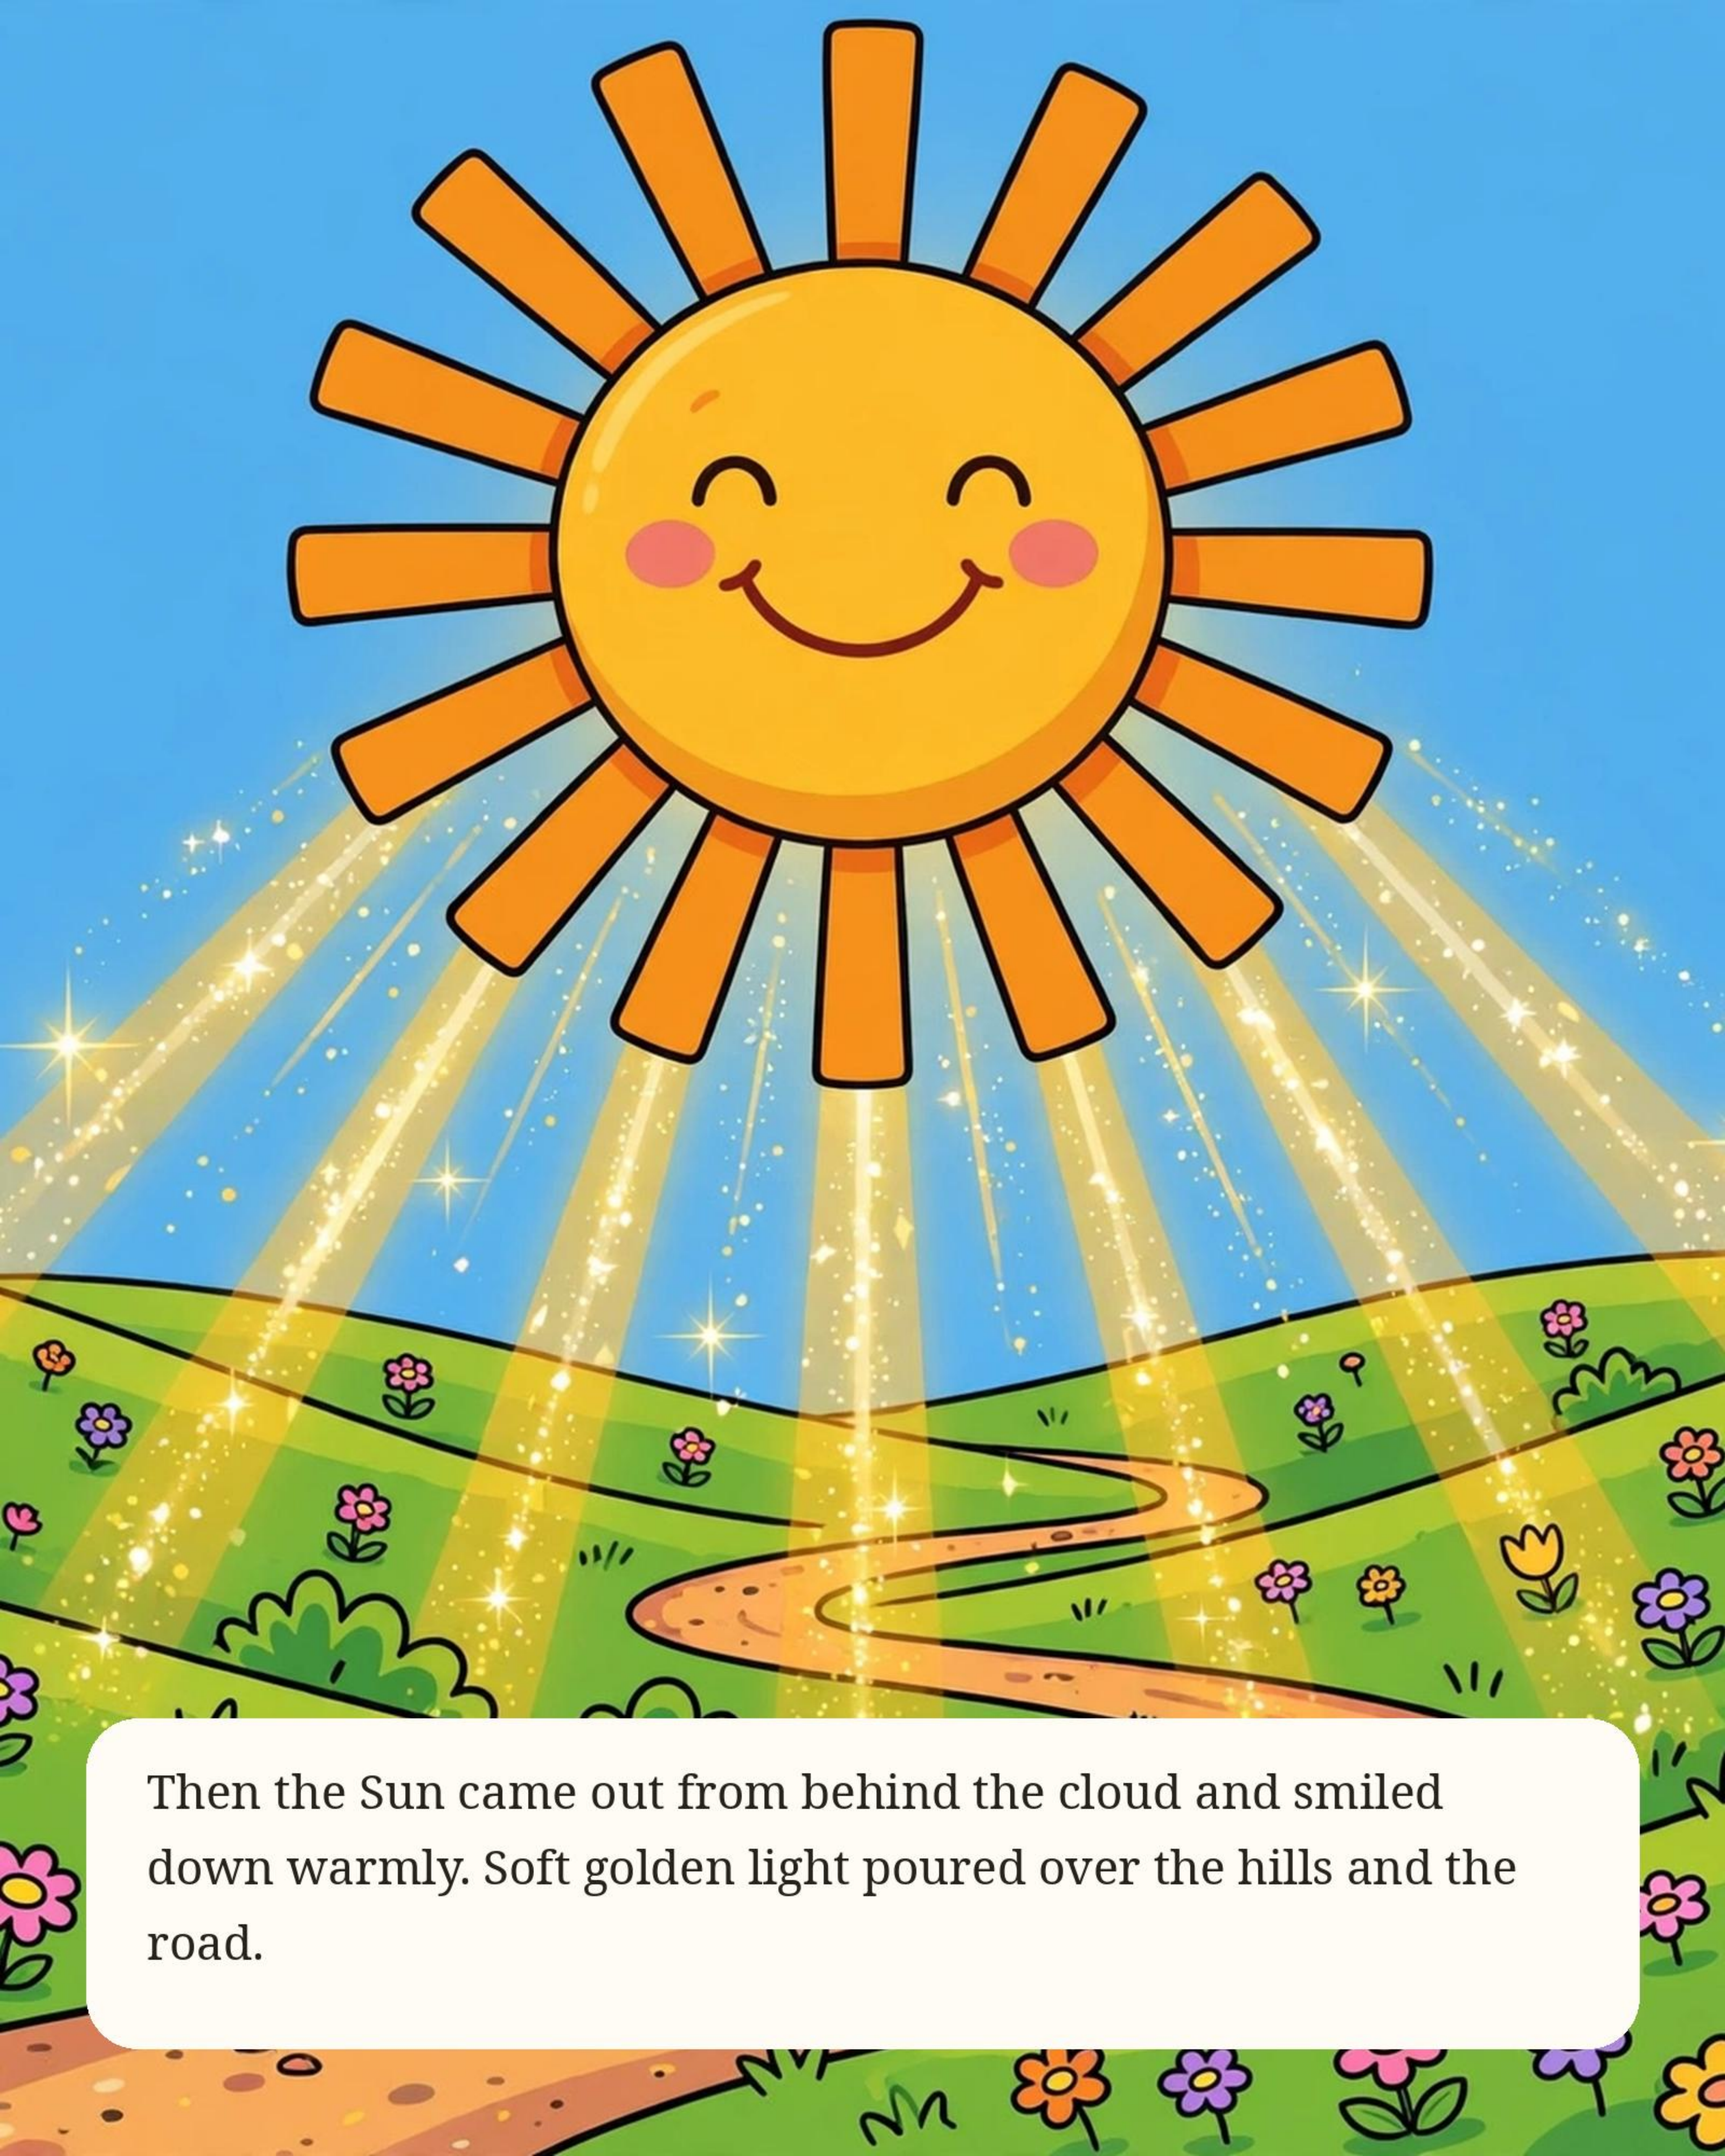

The traveller shivered and pulled his cloak tighter around himself. "Brrr! What a cold wind!" he said, and buttoned it right up to his chin.

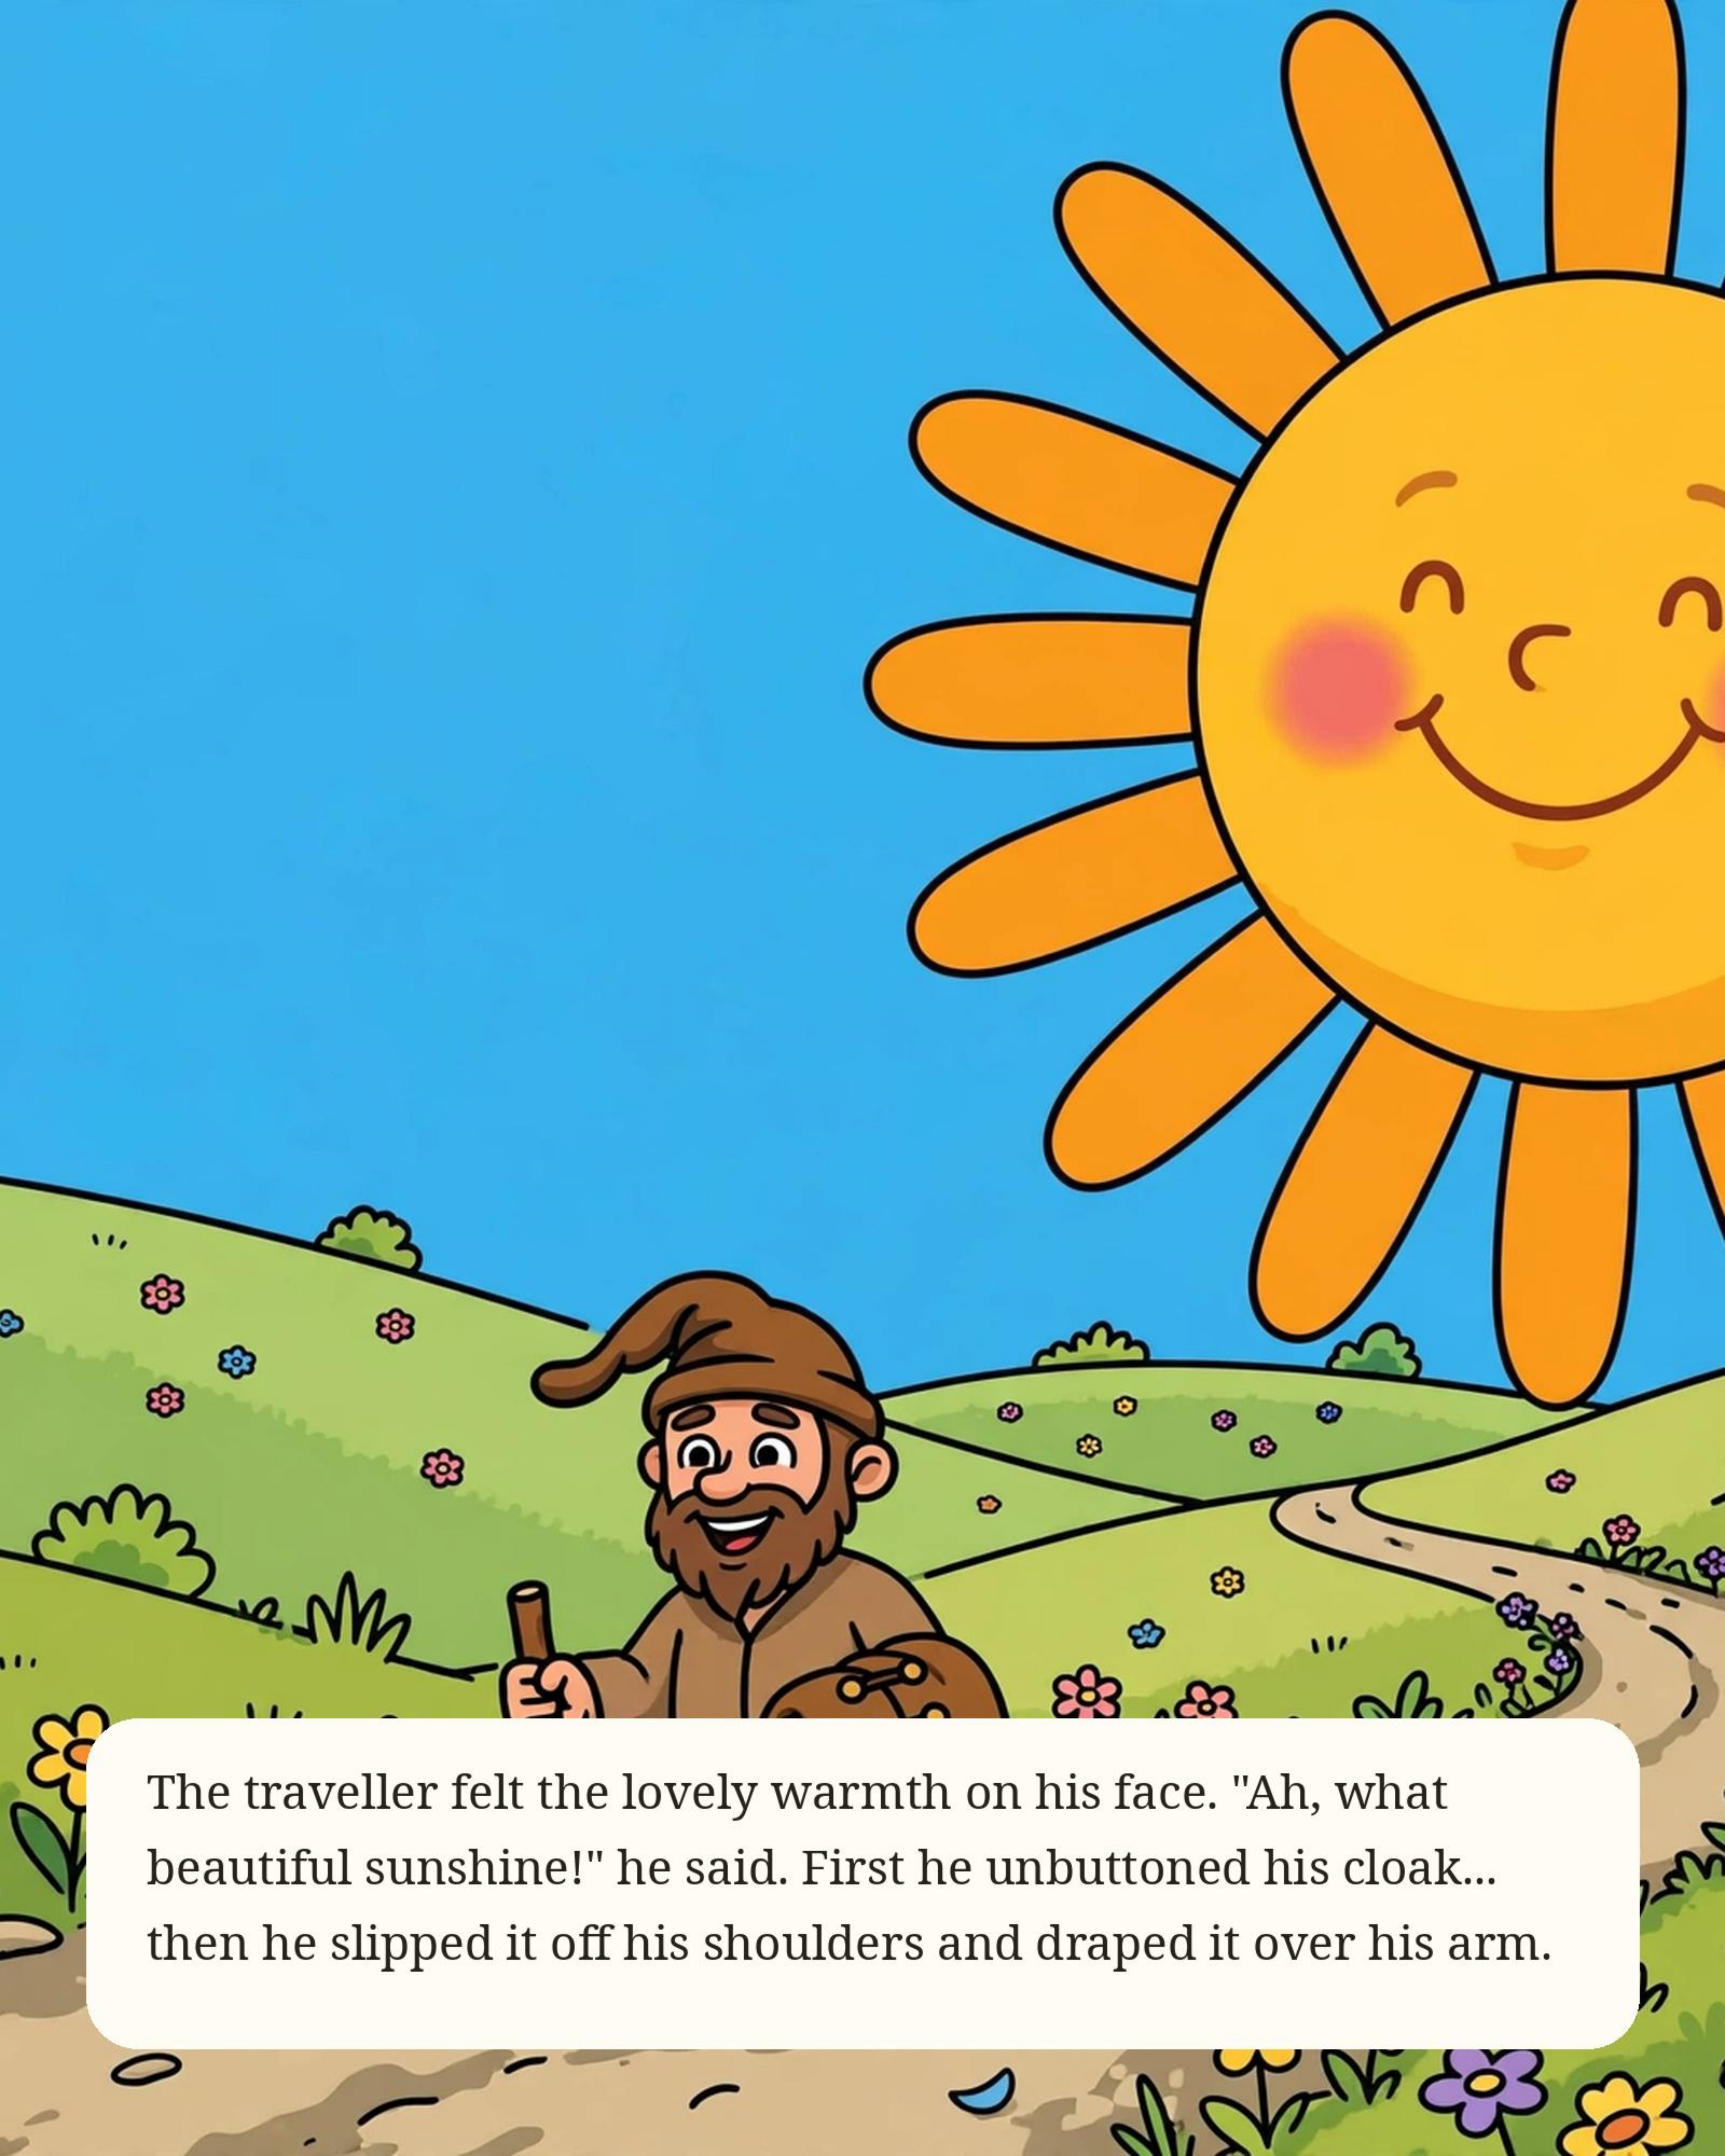

The Wind blew harder — WHOOOOSH! Dust swirled, leaves danced in the air, but the traveller only wrapped his cloak closer and held his hat tight.

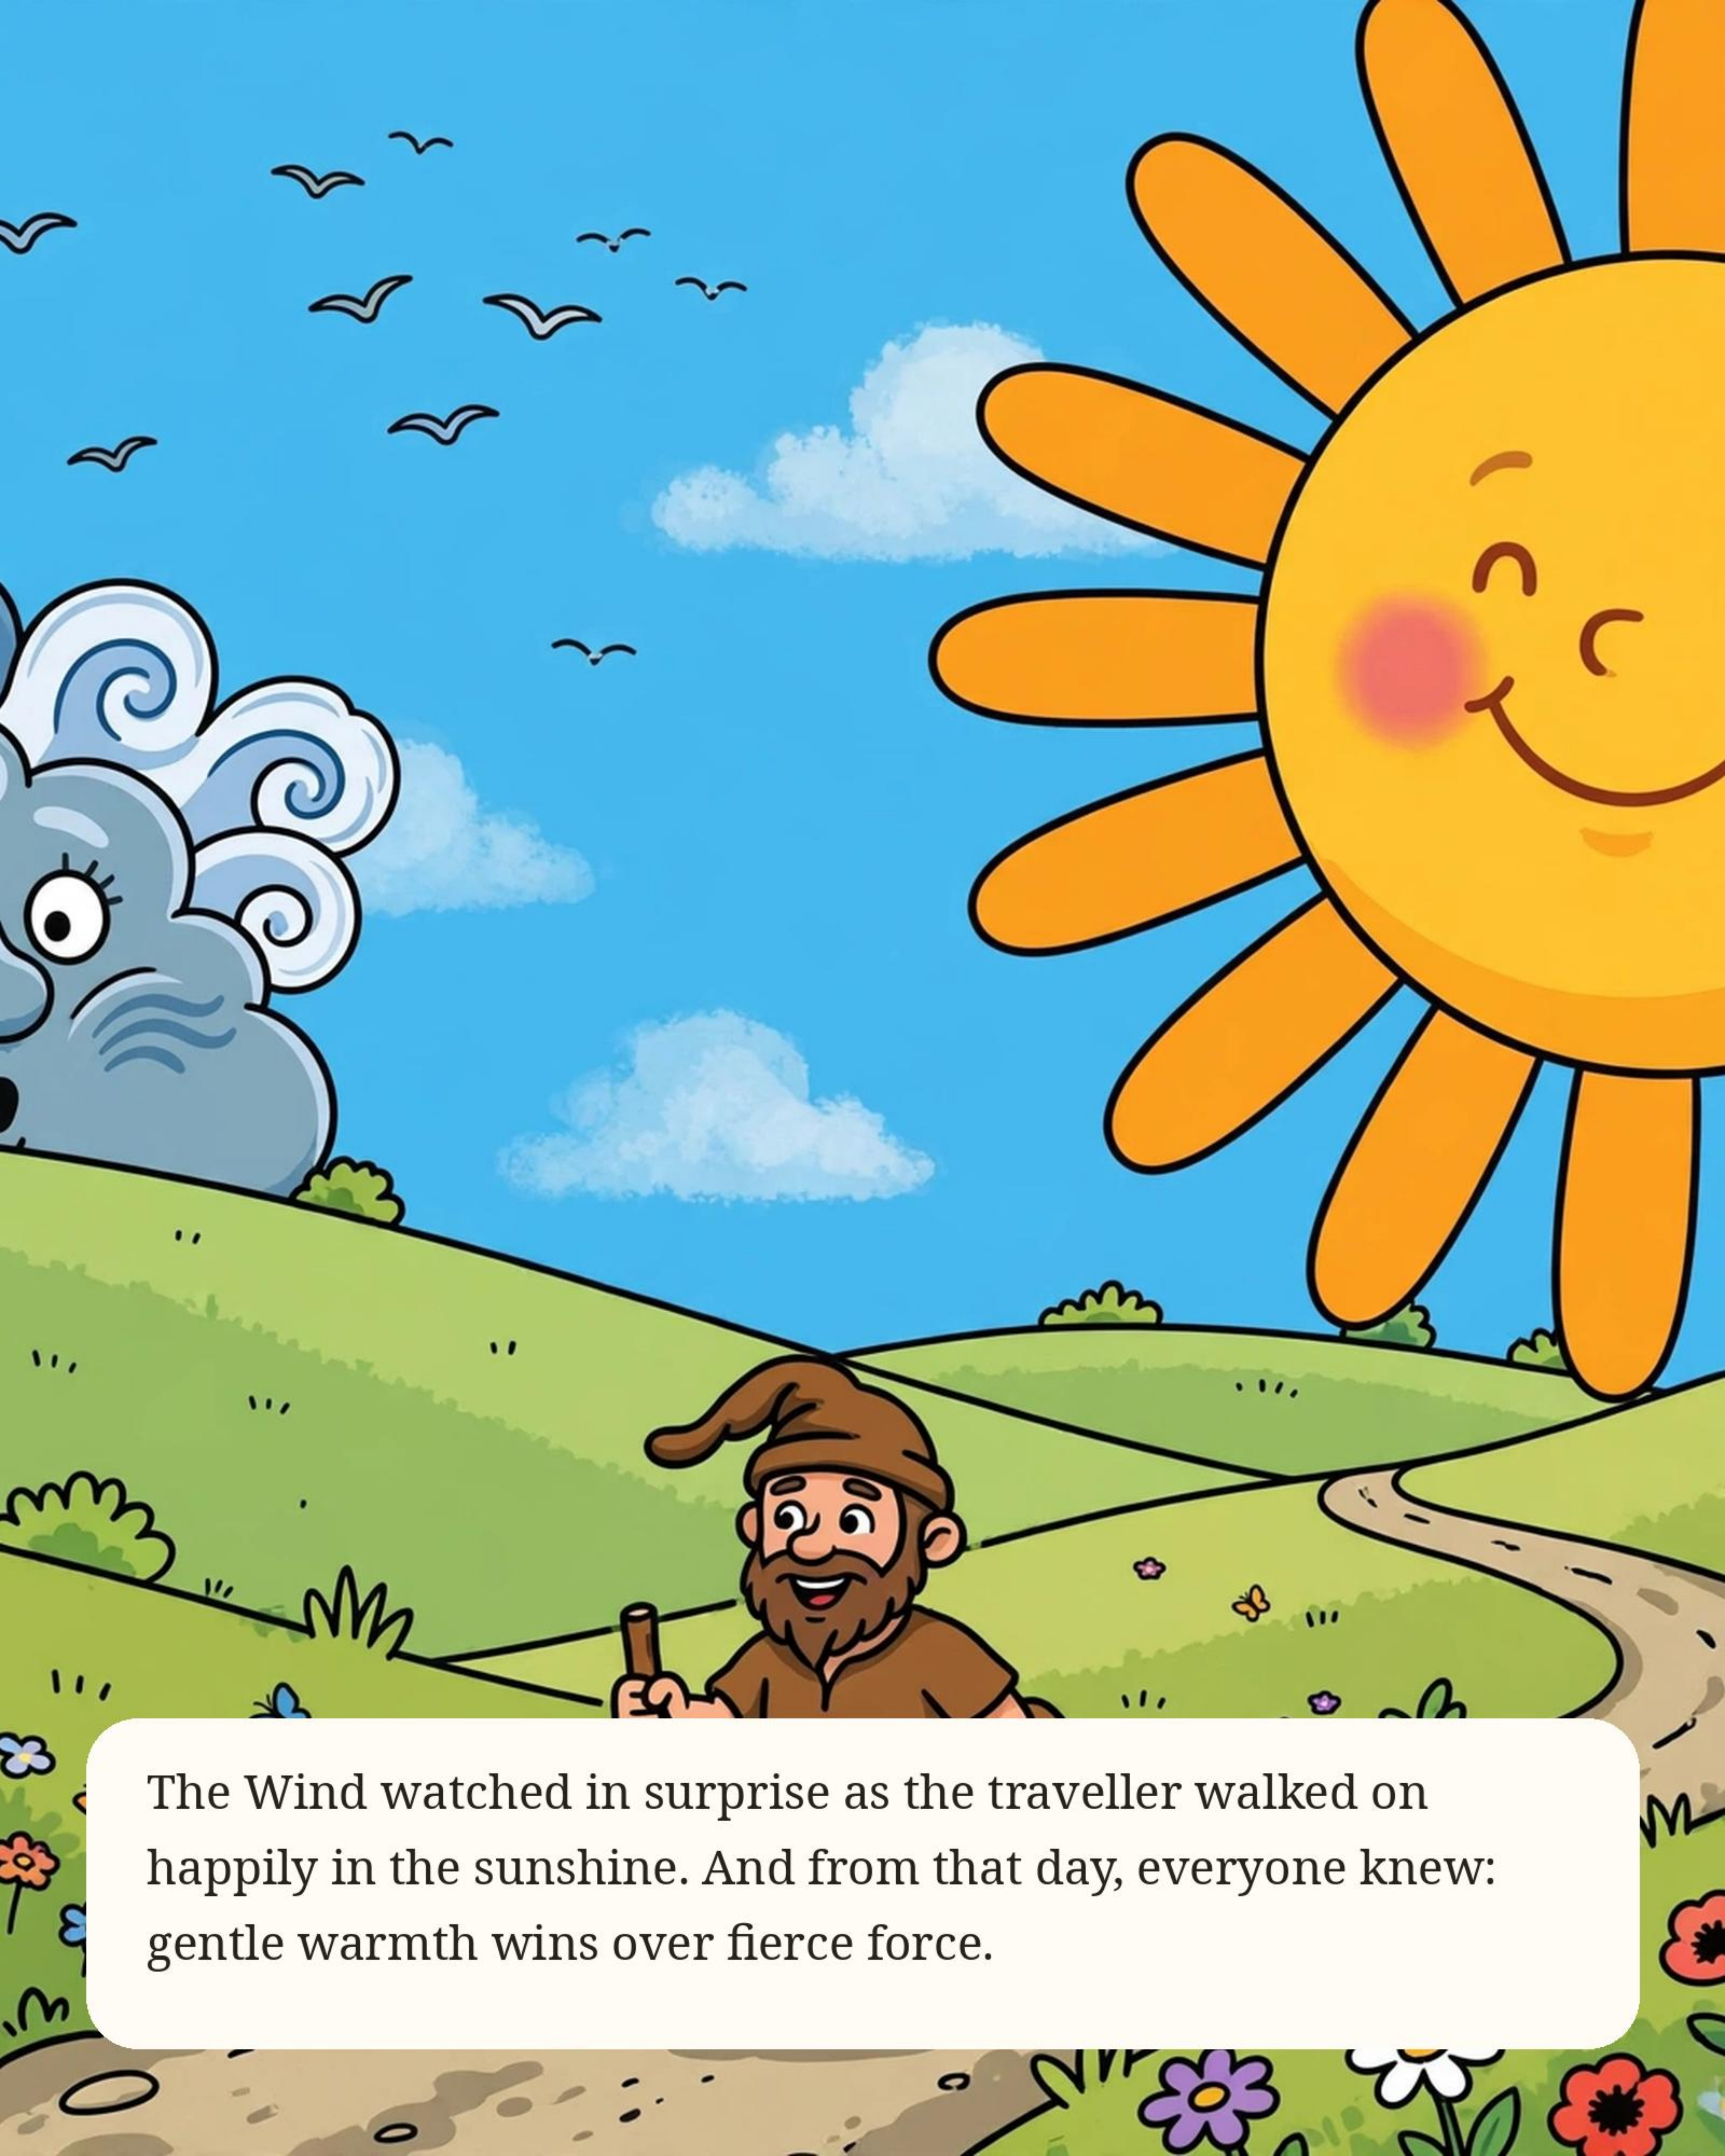

At last the Wind was out of breath. "I give up," he panted, and blew away to rest behind the hills.

Then the Sun came out from behind the cloud and smiled down warmly. Soft golden light poured over the hills and the road.

The traveller felt the lovely warmth on his face. "Ah, what beautiful sunshine!" he said. First he unbuttoned his cloak... then he slipped it off his shoulders and draped it over his arm.

The Wind watched in surprise as the traveller walked on happily in the sunshine. And from that day, everyone knew: gentle warmth wins over fierce force.

Kindness and gentle warmth can do what force cannot.
