Milo the Mole Learns Patience

KIDS BOOK VIDEOS

Milo was a little mole who lived under the big oak tree. One spring morning, he planted a seed — a sunflower seed. He patted the soil, watered it, and then he waited.

One hour passed. Nothing happened.

Milo felt impatient. His paws wiggled. His nose twitched.

"Grow, seed, grow!" he said. He dug it up to check. The seed was still just a seed.

Grandpa Mole chuckled softly. "I see you feel impatient," he said.

Milo nodded.

"It is okay to feel impatient," Grandpa said. "Waiting is hard for everyone."

Grandpa sat beside him. "Good things grow slow, like love," he said.

"Good things grow slow, like love," he said again.

"Good things grow slow, like love," he said one more time.

Milo took a deep breath. He put the seed back in the soil and patted it gently.

"Sorry, little seed," he whispered.

Every day, Milo watered the seed and sang it a tiny song. He did not dig it up again.

One day, a green sprout peeked out.

"Hello!" said Milo. He felt excited.

Days passed, and the sprout grew taller — taller than Milo! Then one sunny morning, a big yellow flower opened. It was the biggest sunflower in the garden, its petals glowing like sunshine. Bees came to visit it. Butterflies danced around it.

Milo felt proud. He had waited, and waiting had worked.
Grandpa Mole hugged him. "You learned patience," he said.

That night, Milo lay in his cozy burrow, thinking about his sunflower. It was sleeping too, under the stars.

Milo yawned. He felt calm. He felt patient.

He closed his eyes. He was loved. He was cozy.

Goodnight, Milo.

Patience means waiting kindly — good things grow slow, like love.

The End
