Juju was a young giraffe calf.

She had a very long neck.

She could reach the tastiest leaves.

But she often forgot her manners.

"Give me that!" she would say.

She never said please.

She never said thank you.

One day, she asked Zebra for some water.

"Give me water!" she said.

Zebra frowned.

He walked away.

Juju felt confused.

Her neck drooped.

Her heart felt small.

"Why is everyone grumpy with me?" she wondered.

Mama Giraffe nuzzled her.

She said, "I see you feel confused."

Juju nodded.

"It is okay to feel confused," Mama said.

"Let me show you the magic words."

She told Juju the secret.

"Please and thank you open hearts."

"Please and thank you open hearts," she said again.

"Please and thank you open hearts," she said one more time.

Juju wanted to try.

She walked back to Zebra.

"Please, may I have some water?" she asked softly.

Zebra smiled.

"Of course, Juju!"

Juju drank the cool water.

"Thank you!" she said.

Zebra beamed.

"You are welcome!"

Juju felt warm inside.

The words felt like magic.

She tried them everywhere.

"Please, may I join the game?" she asked the monkeys.

"Yes!" they said.

"Thank you for the yummy leaves," she told Grandpa Giraffe.

"You are so polite," he said proudly.

Everyone smiled at Juju now.

Being polite felt wonderful.

It made others happy.

And it made Juju happy too.

That night, Juju snuggled under the acacia tree.

The stars twinkled above.

She thought about her day.

She felt confused earlier.

Now she felt proud.

Mama kissed her long neck.

"Your manners are beautiful," she whispered.

The savanna breeze rocked the leaves.

Sway, sway, hush.

Juju closed her eyes.

She was polite.

She was loved.

Goodnight, Juju.

Moral: Please and thank you are small words with big magic.
